25/02/2018

Completed

Part 1 of Clexa week 2018

Captain Woods has had a long day out on patrol. And all she wants right now is sleep and silence. But there seems to be someone in the communal kitchen being obnoxiously loud.

Enter Private Griffin, who's up at 3 in the morning making cookies. No one likes being caught doing someone they're not supposed to and Lexa is not at all impressed by her quirky little comebacks. But maybe, just maybe, they can work out a little deal so Clarke doesn't get in trouble?

Last update: 01/07/2016

Lexa gets to fucking live. Clarke and Lexa are soulmates. Happy endings exist. This is basically a rewrite of the entire series. I will try to take a lot of the potential of the show and use it, Anya gets to have a dynamic with Lexa, Costia has backstory, Wells will get more of a presence. Raven catches a break now and again. Bellamy doesn't completely submit to the man-pain. Pike gets a horribly painful death. Logic might actually exist in terms of science, and I will try to fix super intense plot holes. I will try my best to give everything closure, and give these characters what they deserve. This is not vengeance, this is justice.

*And here it is, a red balloon
I think of you and let it go*
-- 99 Red Balloons, by NENA

The world as they know it has ended. Bombs rained down from the sky, and after a brief moment of connection Clarke and Lexa both find themselves prisoners: Lexa of an underground bunker where she has become the unlikely leader of a group of survivors, and Clarke of the hospital where her mother works, completely untouched by the destruction. Between them stands a wall that didn't exist before; a wall that exists to keep something in... or out. But what?

When Lexa finally surfaces on the 99th day, she discovers that there's nothing left of the city she used to call home... or is there?

Every morning Clarke goes to the roof of the hospital to watch the sun rise. On the 100th day, she sees something on the other side of the wall, where they have been told nothing and no one remains. Something that might just mean not all hope is lost.

Part 1 of Perfect Percentage

Cousins Lexa Woods and Beca Mitchell start their freshman year at Barden University with a silent promise to keep each other protected. Their castle high walls were firmly in place around their hearts, they wouldn't let the other be broken again. But what happens when Clarke Griffin and Chloe Beale are able to create cracks and slip into their hearts?

Will they be broken again? Will they find feelings they thought they had lost forever?

Part 1 of The 100

All of these people, twisted their story into a tapestry, weaving and sewing the worst strands life has to offer. They twisted and weaved and danced and sang and cried and laughed and screamed and ran, feet racing across green strands of jealousy, blue silks of sadness, angry red satin, dark black wool, and deep purple velvet, leaping and weaving the whole time.

They wove their tears, their laughter, their pain, triumphs, love, misery and hatred into a story. A story of ten, twenty, fifty thousand parts. Fifty thousand parts. Six people.

A story that they weaved over a hundred lives. In some they were rich, others poor. In some they found love, others misery. In all, they found each other, in one tundra different ways, spanning one hundred lives. Three couples, forever looping around time.

One always remembering their past life. The other never does.

This is their story. This is that story. But it's being told, in a slightly different way.

It all started, with a neglected child, bully fodder, a foster kid, a cripple, a prom queen, and a nerd.

After one particularly bad date she decides to do an evening of fares. What starts off as a normal pick up at a stately home leads to an adventure through time, taking fares from the most unusual folk..

Final destination? Love, or heartbreak.

TLDR: Clarke doesn't realize she has a time travelling taxi..one that might just take her to where/who she belongs.

Maybe Clarke had changed during her absence and stopped being an obnoxious brat. At least, that's what Lexa hoped.

Clarke, on the other hand, is excited to finally take a break from her demanding career and ready to enjoy her favorite holiday with her family. Going back home means she will see her neighbor Lexa after long years apart. Clarke knows that this is the season to make amends and she's more than ready to do better.

Maybe both will find a way to reconnect and be the friends that they could have been in the past. Maybe.

Or, Jake and Abby's Christmas wish to see their daughter in love with their neighbor could finally happen. They have been sailing that ship for a long time. God knows they deserve it. Whatever happens, one thing's for sure: this is the best time of the year!

Following the collapse of the Final Empire, a rebel leader and hero of the Skaa is crowned Queen of the new government. In a show of good faith to the once powerful noble houses, Clarke of House Griffin has been invited to live with the rebel Queen to foster unity and trust between Nobleman and Skaa. Only Clarke knows nothing about the Queen. She hardly knows anything about Skaa. But Lexa, the Survivor of Hathsins, is no ordinary Skaa. She is mistborn. She is hope to a people who had nothing to hope for. And until very recently, she wanted every last noble dead.

To maintain the fragile peace between north and south, Clarke of House Tyrell is sent to live in Winterfell as an act of faith between the two kingdoms. There, she is put under the protection of the first queen in the north, Queen Lexa of House Stark, Daughter of Wolves. A woman draped in steel and silver, wolves at her heels and rumoured to be a manifestation of the fury of the old gods; Clarke refuses to be awed by her quiet violence and cold smile. Instead of fostering unity, the meeting of the wolf and the rose lights a spark that spreads through the rest of Westeros, threatening to burn it to the ground.

Soulmates.

It is said that no matter what life they are reborn into soulmates will always find each other, and once they look at each other's eyes all memories of their past lives and their love for each other will resurface.

For the past hundred years that is the only thing that has constantly floated around in Lexa's mind. Without the love of her life, filled with sadness and bitterness, isn't how Lexa thought she'd spend her first decade as a vampire.

But now she's found her again. Clarke. Right in front of her and eyes just as beautiful as she could remember. And yet, no look of recognition. No remembrance of their love.

Nothing.

Something is wrong. Very wrong.

And Lexa is willing to do everything to get Clarke back to her.

Alive, yet no quite living. She decides that the only possible way she can block the disease and keep Raven alive is to go back to where the thing that scares her the most lives. Her own power.

Clarke's life has been tied to a monster since she can remember. All she has ever known is the power of Wanheda; the beast that will live in her for what remains of her life. The misery keeps her captive within the cold walls of the building that is where she mourns; she doesn't know when the blood gets to her hands; she kills when she becomes the monster.

Nights become longer and the prince still sends warriors to free her from the curse; they never make it back to the palace for they always get to the princess at the wrong time.

The curse will remain until the successor of the mage who cast it is killed by the beast they created.

Meanwhile, the horses and mages live in peace; as dark magic gives birth to a new clan, the alliance begins to waver.

"Love is your biggest strength, but also your biggest weakness."

When an ex-marine joins the Seattle Fire Department, things get heated. She meets a surgeon from Grey-Sloan memorial (who is also a part-time artist) and suddenly, everything that matters changes. Some things are forgivable, some are not. Some people are worth it, some are not. Love knows no limits, but love also knows pain and suffering. Part 2 of A Royal Affair

"Quiet," Lexa whispers between kisses. "My soldiers are right outside."

Clarke pulls her lips away from Lexa hand and nips playfully at her fingers. "So dismiss them," she says, humming another moan as Lexa's lips continue to trail down her neck.

She wants to, gods, she wants to. But doing that is too suspicious. The logical thing to do is to stop. The logical thing to do is to escort Clarke back to the list so that she can watch Bellamy's joust with Lincoln before anyone notices that they're gone, that they're still inside Bellamy's pavilion. But Lexa isn't thinking logically, not when Clarke is pressed up against her, squirming and moaning and desperately clawing at her for more.

"We should stop," she says, more to herself than to Clarke, but Clarke isn't having it. She grabs Lexa's face and presses their lips together again.

"Shut up," she tells her and Lexa obliges.

Clarke has been dreaming with a woman in black for some time. She doesn't know who she is or what is her name. Clarke only knows that the stranger has been haunting her nights and it needs to stop.

Drowning in a sea of confusion, Clarke is set on finding the truth behind those dreams with the help of her friend Raven. Maybe she should just call for a psychology consultation. Because really, it doesn't make sense. Her woman in black doesn't age, she looks the same in every damn dream. Or it could be that Raven is right, it is something else, something not from this world.

Fifty years after Luke Skywalker and the Rebel Alliance defeated the Empire, the galaxy was thrown into war once more. While they tried to build a new Galactic Republic, this ultimately failed. The Jedis were losing the war and as a final ditch effort they build a space city, the Ark, to strike back when they have rebuilt their forces and to save the galaxy from the Dark Side.

It's been 300 years, Clarke is a Jedi in training and during a jump through hyperspace part of the Ark breaks away. They plummet towards an inhabited planet in the Trikru Sector of a newly formed galactic empire.

The newly formed Galactic Empire is not as stable as its once been, and the Jedi are left with no choice but to accelerate their plans of reconquest to free the enslaved people. But not all is what it seems, and in the vastness of space, more threats lurk which are a danger to all.

When Clarke Griffin and her mother return to Polis, the city of her birth, all Clarke wants to do is find others like her, graduate high school and get into college. But an unexpected attack forces her to reveal her superhuman abilities and save someone close to her. This revelation forces Clarke to take up a position as the superhero Skaiprisa, but being a superhero is harder than the comics ever made it out to be; she has to deal with governments task forces trying to put her down, a stubborn police department, an insane CEO, criminal Abnormals, crazy friends who may be onto her secret and may be like her, and a seasoned vigilante who is most definitely like her. Outside of her alter ego, Clarke struggles with a new school, new faces, college applications, a frosty relationship with her mother, and a poorly timed crush on her cold hearted class mate. Of course it could only be her. Clarke's heart seemed to stop for a few seconds when she finally saw the Commander. No war paint on her face and she was actually looking like any grounder. She crossed her arms on her chest.

Clarke Griffin and Lexa Woods are co-stars on a hit cop TV show. They don't really get along but the world is convinced they're secretly dating. When Clarke unexpectedly finds herself pregnant, Lexa steps in with a plan. They'll pretend they've been together for a while and that they planned the pregnancy. Clarke's reputation as America's Sweetheart should be untarnished and Lexa's reputation as a bad girl gets a serious image boost as she's seen as a committed partner and future parent.

Anya nudged her and redirected her attention, "Looks like they have some new talent this year."

Lexa tried to shrug her off, "Probably. Helps to have new players to choose from for the World Cup," but Anya nodded in the direction of the team again.

Lexa scanned more closely this time. Her eyes landed on a dark-haired woman with tanned skin suited up that she didn't recognize as being the keeper that Arkadia had played during their last season, Octavia Blake who Lexa would be surprised if she wasn't at least called up to a camp for TWNT this year, someone with red hair that Lexa most likely would have remembered if she played last season and another brunette who had a right arm full of tattoos.

"What are you on about, Lachmann?" Lexa's eyes locked onto a blonde that had half of her half pulled up into a ponytail while the other half rested on the nape of her neck. She was juggling a ball, and when she looked up, her blue eyes locked with Lexa's, and for a second, the butterflies that had been on their great migration in Lexa's stomach stopped flapping.

"There it is."

Summary: It is the year 2375 and the USS Ark is five years into a ten-year deep space exploration mission. Low on deuterium reserves, the Ark must seek out new sources so that they can make the journey back to Earth. Clarke, Octavia, Raven, Bellamy, and Wells are sent to explore an anomalous asteroid field. Pulled into a mysterious planet by a gravimetric distortion, their shuttlecraft crashes, stranding the officers until the Ark finds them. That is, unless the pre-warp civilization, the Trigeda, finds them first.

Part 2 of Ai Seingeda, Ai Bloka, Ai Gon (My Family, My Shield, My Weapon)

Three years have passed since the war against the Shaigedakru. Three years have passed since Lexa and Clarke settled down with their family. Three years full of joy and peace.

They watch their children growing fast, build their homes and grow and hunt their own food in balance with nature. The peace between the clans is stable, the bond deep and solid.

Only two times Lexa and Rayne had to leave home to travel to Polis and act as Hedas. The first time, Clarke stepped down as leader of the Skaikru and the sisters welcomed Abby and Kane as their new leaders.

The second time, shortly after, Kahl and his wife Nizha were welcomed, also as leaders to the Skaikru and Azgeda. The merging of the two clans worked out better than expected and to keep things even and peaceful, the offer to let the merged clan be ruled by not only two, but four people was accepted.

The peace is stable; there is no threat left. Or at least they all believe so.

Three years of peace and serenity end too quickly when Lexa's niece finds the first corpse.

Klark could feel her lungs burn with exertion and her legs were cramping. She saw a the Tomac River that ran south from her position and knew if she followed it she would be able to get to Tondisi. Her best option to lose her trackers was to get in the river but it had a fast current. She looked over her shoulder and saw the torches coming towards her. She cut towards the river and waded in to her waist before looking over her shoulder again. They were getting closer. She took a deep breath and dove into the cold water. The current grabbed her and started pulling her quickly along the length of the bank. She was gasping for breath as her small body bobbed up and down. The river would either wash her up on shore somewhere hopefully very far from here or kill her but she had to take the chance.

King Gustus and Queen Indra of Polis have offered their Alpha son Lincoln to mate with the Omega princess of Arkadia, daughter of King Jacob and Queen Abigail, in hopes to solidify the new alliance between their countries. But what happens when the Omega princess feels an undeniable connection to the Princess of Polis, rather than the Prince?

or The princess AU in which Lexa and Clarke are true mates.

This is a rewrite of the events that happened post season two, starting right after the assault on Mount Weather. It's season three as I would have liked to have seen it and as it should have been. There will be a lot of focus on the Grounder culture and their attempts to coexist with Skaikru - or lack thereof. We will get to see the ruthlessness and the burning feud between Lexa and Nia, and the softness that Lexa reserves only for Clarke. Expect drama, lust, violence, betrayal, action, war, and of course lots and lots of Clexa fluff/smut.

This is the season three that we deserved to see, and hopefully it will help everyone who is reading to forget about the one we got - even just for a little while.

Lexa Woods is unflappable. Clarke knows this and is constantly infuriated by it. They've been friends for years, along with Octavia and Raven, and she's never seen Lexa scared once.

It's annoying.

It's also their last year of college and their last Halloween as vaguely not-adults, so Clarke calls an emergency meeting with Octavia and Raven to come up with a plan.

"I'm serious, guys!" she yells, waving a stack of papers through the air. "There has to be something!"

"Clarke, I think you're too invested in this," Raven says, still snuggled in her blankets with Octavia curled next to her. "Also, it's five in the morning and our heater is broken, why the fuck are you here?"

"Because we need to do something!"

"I think you just want her to jump in your arms like you did to her that one time at Fright Fest."

"I- no- Raven, what-" Clarke splutters, blushing heavily. "I just want to prove that she's not as unflappable as she says she is!"

Lexa is an ex-Marine seriously wounded in combat in the war against Mt. Weather. Taking up a somewhat boring life in the Secret Service, she lives her life with anonymity and without excitement-which she prefers.

Though her physical injuries have long since healed, Lexa battles the demons in her mind on a daily basis in the form of nightmares, anxiety attacks, and flashbacks. When a friend is attacked and left fighting for their life, Lexa finds herself drawn back into the world of violence and blood in order to protect a familiar face from an enemy long thought dead.

Clarke, a gifted doctor and daughter to the president, never forgot the Marine who selflessly threw herself in the way of a literal missile to protect a stranger. Though her time in the war was spent trying to save others, Clarke inevitably shares some of the same demons as Lexa. Finding her life in danger on home soil throws her on a collision course with the very same Marine a few years later. This time, they have to work together to ensure the danger stays dead this time.

Lexa had not been back even a week before her past was greeting her at the door. Or in this case, the form of a phone call from the hospital. Lexa will wonder if on any other circumstance they would have come together again to mend what has broken and has been broken and can even seem irreparable, or if it was all due to that very phone call and Clarke's considerable amount of stubbornness. Lexa can think destiny is stupid and fate is shit all she wants but it is those things that leave her lying in wait, in a hospital chair, filling out forms on Clarke's behalf because Clarke had forgotten, or hadn't wanted, to change who her emergency contact was.

It is that simple moment that crumbles an entire year apart and forces the both of them to come out of a standstill that the year before them has drown them in. As Clarke heals from physical wounds and Lexa aids her, they'll both have to acknowledge their own realities and have to find a way to heal the pain they had been trying their hardest to ignore. Not a day goes by that she doesn't think about Clarke. There was so much about her that Lexa never wanted to forget. The blonde hair that she imagined was smooth as silk. That special laugh that would always turn into the most adorable snort. Most of all, she wanted to remember the soft blue eyes. Sometimes she wishes she could mark the exact shade, but she didn't have the artistic talent that she would need. Clarke had that talent. She could have told Lexa the shade.

If Lexa had known what would happen between this last moment and the next few years. She would have ran through the crowd that swallowed Clarke whole. Part 1 of Imperfect

Clarke and Lexa have been the best of friends for years, perhaps the closest of all in their group of friends. The connection, chemistry and comfort that they share is unmatched by any of their other friends. Everyone knows that when they're both single things tend to happen between them. It's a comfort thing. A no strings attached thing. A thing that they both silently understand. But, do they really?

They're best friends who have the power to lift each other up, but also the power to tear each other down.

What could possibly go wrong?

There is one thing that will always be true - The one that brings out the best in you, will always be the one that can bring out the worst in you.

Love shouldn't be your biggest secret, and Clarke, Lexa, Octavia and Raven are done keeping theirs quiet. On the night of Clarke's first big solo art show the truth comes out, and the audience includes more people than they bargained for. As the night unfurls the four look back on the development of their relationship; how they avoided break ups, and mended broken hearts, learning that sometimes it's terrifying to be in love, but it's worth it at the end of the day, and, maybe, most importantly, discovering that under no circumstances should Clarke Griffin be allowed to cook.

It was suppose that it was over. The Earth and people were save, they just needed time to heal, time to understated their new beginning. Find the way of live with each other's again. It took them 2 years to build a home again.

Except for Clarke. She lost Lexa again. There is something that never ends. So much has changed since her first time in earth, Clarke became another person and now she is a leader, but she is tired, but maybe there was an opportunity, she feels it for the moment she hear her voice through the radio. "Lexa?" "Yes?"

Her home wasn't on this earth anymore. She needs to go to the new earth and find her. Because just by her voice, something happen in her hearth. It has to be her, she must be her home.

Lexa has always felt that it wasn't enough; She loved space but somehow she doesn't understand why she love it in that way, the blue sky for sure and stars, but still something feels so odd with it, some feelings that she didn't understand. Before she even know, the odd feeling has a name, "Clarke".

Because they are two worlds colliding, one more time.

Anthem: "a usually rousing popular song that typifies or is identified with a particular subculture, movement, or point of view; anthems of teenage angst."

Clarke and Lexa discover their attraction towards each other one summer before they begin their senior year in high school. True to the typical nineties tropes; Clarke is a reserved, straight A geek who is into board games and sci-fi novels and Lexa is the popular rich girl rebelling because 'mommy doesn't love me anymore'. For some reason, their paths collide and they slowly discover that they are more alike than they are different.

Go into the motions of unrequited love, crushes, mutual pining, first kisses, coming out and teenage angst superimposed against the pop and alternative music of the era. Inspired by movie plot references such as that of Can't Hardly Wait, A Walk to Remember, and She's All That; Lexa and Clarke experience a summer that would change their outlooks and a senior year that would change their lives.
