Baby, Maybe

a: TLK

10/09/2016

Completed

At the sight of the shorter brunette, before Clarke can even process what was happening, or remember who moved where first, she was running out the door and colliding into her bestfriend's open arms, tears cascading down her cheeks, a thick sob ripped from her throat as Octavia's arms wrapped around the blonde's body tightly.

With her back to the main door, Clarke didn't see the worried looks everyone shot their way, no doubt jaws clenching at the heartbreaking sight of a young girl falling apart in her bestfriend's arms. But, no matter how much they felt for Clarke, only one other person knows exactly how the blonde feels. The green eyed brunette who is now standing next to the boys, watching the same scene they were watching, her heart slowly breaking some more. She finally had the courage to tear her gaze away from the two women when Lincoln placed a gentle hand on Lexa's shoulder, adding a light squeeze of comfort, before nodding his head a little towards the house.

Baby We Were Born to Run

a: RoseMcGardner03

18/03/2019

Last update: 23/03/2019

The year is 1968. Ten years ago in the year 1958, the Supreme Court in One, Inc. vs Olsen deemed the homosexual magazine to not per se be obscene. In the next ten years during the year 1978, gay rights activist Harvey Milk will be assassinated. In a small town near Mount Weather, Virginia, Clarke Griffin and Lexa Woods lead two very different lives. The only thing they had in common at first was that they were both gay... For each other.

Together, the two girls struggle with class division, societies views of homosexuality and their own views of what they feel for one another during a time when the LGBTQ community started to strongly advocate for their rights in the United States.

Being Alexandria Woods was not easy and popularity was beginning to be uncomfortable, especially because every single person in her life wanted only perfection from her. So yes, being Alexandria Woods was not easy and having a crush for her teacher it was not certainly the right way to finish high school. She knew that was wrong and she should be ashamed but she did not care.

Everyone was expecting perfection from her: school grades, the swimming team, at home and with her friends. All that pressure gave her permission to have a crush on Miss Griffin.

Myths are thought to be unreal objects, but sometimes a few things can come close to the very description of said myth.

Commander Lexa learned that exact lesson the hard way after being robbed by the infamous bandit group of the 12 clans, nicknamed The Ghosts. They had ambushed her group and stole all their belongings, including her proposal necklace for Costia, making them number one on Polis' Most Wanted list.

The last remaining survivors of the Ark crashed within No Man's land, and were raised by a group of rogue grounders. Trained in the ways of stealing, counterfeiting, coning, and assassinating, they grew to be the perfect image of a trained thief/hired assassin. They could rob anyone, anywhere, but they never meant to steal from the Commander. Some people are just at the wrong place at the wrong time, not to mention that when an opportunity such as this arises a thief never backs out.

"Despite working in the industry I do, being married to my work isn't a good enough life for these people. I need someone who can act a certain way, convince people of what I need to sell, and I do believe you're the best candidate. If you're interested, that is."

Lexa closes her eyes for a moment - she got it all out and didn't really embarrass herself or exposed herself too much, that was something to be proud of - before looking at Clarke again. She's smirking, the playful glint in her eyes giving away her amusement. This probably isn't the first time someone asked her to play pretend. Which shouldn't surprise Lexa, yet, somehow, it does.

Lexa was a witch. A real witch with magic flowing through her veins, yet she never told a soul that fact. Still, townsfolk showed up on her doorstep after dark, begging for a spell or potion, and Lexa was more than happy to lend a neighborly hand. As long as the request didn't fall outside her moral boundaries. Hexes, curses, love potions and spells. That's where Lexa drew the line.

Clarke was a baker who just opened shop in the small Massachusetts town. Everyone warned her about a certain, very beautiful, frequent customer. They would tell her how scary and dangerous Lexa Woods was.

But sometimes magic was a fickle little thing, and when she made up her mind, it was usually pretty futile to fight it.

Every hero has a story. A tale of happiness before a tragic accident takes something away and then they become warriors for justice. They're the figures of hope, courage, and strength. As for the villains, they don't quite get the same love and luxury. They too often suffer an accident that changes their entire life and then they become figures based off their own promise. These villains are then created into figures of darkness, insanity, and corruption.

But, what if someone showed you their real story and their fall into their new life? What if you saw the person behind the mask of insanity and darkness and read a story from both sides of a hero's story? What if a hero and a villain both began to see eye to eye and created a new storyline for the world to see.

Canon divergence story from episode 3x07 where Lexa is not shot and Clarke still leaves. Clarke tries to stop the war with the grounders but her and Lexa end up on opposite sides despite being completely in love with each other. Their relationship is still a secret and there is lots of pining. In this version Jaha never found the City of Light, Alie 1 isn't ending the world but just dormant and the nightbloods were still created. Titus has still captured Murphy but he never shot anyone being too distracted with finding out about Murphy's knowledge of the symbol.

Clarke Griffin was probably one of the most annoying people that Lexa had ever met. Something about her irritated Lexa as soon as she first laid eyes on her. Perhaps it was the fact that she'd only appeared at Arkadia University two months ago but she'd already made friends with more people than Lexa had spoken to in her entire school career. Maybe it was that she laughed a little too loudly while their professor was talking, drawing more eyes to her, Lexa's included. Perhaps it was because that laugh was actually one of the prettiest things Lexa had ever heard.

When Clarke showed up for her first shift at the bar that Lexa had been enjoying working at since the beginning of the semester, Lexa wasn't happy. She'd spent months being distracted by Clarke in their shared class but Clarke didn't even recognise Lexa stood in the bar in front of her.

Part 11 of The 100 drabbles

Ever since Lexa managed to escape from Azgeda's clutches, she hasn't been the same. Her people want their Commander back, and she's terrified to set foot in Polis, not after what happened.

It's been around a year now, and with Clarke Griffin in her own home, everything is changing and breaking. Memories are resurfacing, and familiar faces seem to be everywhere. Lexa feels useless, and everything is crumbling around her. Although, not everything is just as simple as it seems, and everyone brings something new to the table.

But after all, jus drein jus daun.

The dance hall was practically silent as the three newcomers proceeded through the crowd of excited onlookers. Clarke figured out quickly that in addition to Mr. Bellamy Blake--who had rented out the Arkadia property that had too long been vacant, much to the pleasure of the scheming mothers of the county--the two ladies accompanying him were his sister Miss Octavia and his close friend, Miss Lexa Forrester. Bellamy and Octavia were smiling pleasantly enough, especially when Sir Kane greeted them at the opposite end of the room. Lexa, however, remained stoic, eyeing Clarke's friends and neighbors with what appeared to be skepticism and even judgement.

"She owns more than half of Polishire," Gina whispered in a conspiratorial tone, poking CLarke's side as she continued to track the woman across the room.

"So she's rich in addition to very pretty," Anya drawled.

Part 1 of Before Words, Beyond Silence

A re-imagining from the Pilot:

Clarke Griffin is rudely taken from her cell in the middle of the night only to be forced into a room with the man she hates the most - the man who floated her father - Thelonius Jaha.

He then informs her that she will be sent to Earth almost immediately to determine whether or not the ground is survivable again in the hopes of saving their people from certain doom. Alone.

On top of it all, the fate of 98 other adolescent prisoners rests on her succeeding in this mission.

In other words: she's screwed.

Before she knows it, she's hurtling towards the planet at top speed with no control over the contraption that's presumably carrying her to her death.

After she somehow manages to survive the crash landing, she finds herself alone in unknown lands struggling to fight through the pain of her extensive injuries.

Only, she's not alone. Far from it, in fact.

Who are these strange inhabitants whose language is so different from her own?

Why does she get the feeling she's just walked into a much bigger problem than the one she left behind on the Ark?

More importantly: how is she going to survive?

Lots of angst, darkness and soul searching for both characters as well as the drama and danger that awaits them in leading their people against new threats. Budding romance & interactions with other characters. Very NSFW in later chapters. This doesn't follow s3 at all guys except for how Polis looks and it has the Nightbloods, and Titus doesn't exist. Part 1: Under the Dome

Clarke was sent to Earth to check if it was habitable. It was. Or at least the series of islands she landed on was. The thing is, all of the place's inhabitants were women. Or so it seems.

Part 2: Between Clouds and Smoke

Clarke and Lexa face the repercussions of the events in the past months of their lives. Be it a consequence or a solution, they must journey through it together, and try not to fall apart.

One of Clarke's favorite things about summer vacation is getting to spend as much time as she wants reading. Every year she rereads her favorite series, even though she should probably have outgrown them by now. One day she accidentally leaves her favorite book under a tree, and when she goes back to look for it in the morning, it's gone.

Lexa has always lived under the thumb of her father, Titus, the leader of a religious sect that eschews modern technology, the outside world, and any way of thinking that doesn't come from their holy book. Girls are only taught to read enough to parse passages of scripture... but Lexa wants more. When an escaped horse leads her onto a neighbor's property, she finds a book sitting under a tree. On impulse, she picks up it and hides it, staying up all night to read. She sneaks out the next morning to return it.

Still moping over the loss of her favorite book the next day, Clarke is shocked to discover the book is right where she left it, and she thinks she might be losing her mind... until she discovers a note inside.

Lexa finds she cannot offer an adequate answer.

"I do not know," she returns, turning her gaze from Clarke's piercing stare, "I just know that we cannot continue to live like this."

"We'll figure something out," Clarke whispers against the shell of her ear. Lexa shifts, allowing her forehead to drop against Clarke's own, afraid to break the simplicity of the moment.

She knows tomorrow brings blood and death, as has nearly every other day she has lived on this Earth, but she will fight for every millisecond of hope and love they can find within each other. Of that she has no doubt.

Tomorrow may bring no certainty, but tonight...tonight there is them. And for that simple reason, it's enough.

She's jumping with excitement. Her and her best friend Raven were meeting their favorite band, Blood Thirsty. They've both had crushes on the three sisters in the rock trio, Anya, Lexa and Gaia Woods since they were 15. They had backstage passes but Raven didn't want to wait.

"Raven, we can't be back here," Clarke said, trying to stop her from walking backstage. Surprisingly there wasn't a lot of security so they got back easily. The two walked through the halls, Clarke looking behind her, making sure no one was following them.

"Hey Clarke," Raven whispered, making her turn around. "Their changing room." Clarke tried to stop her as she creaked open the door. The friend looked through the crack with one eye and their jaws dropped.

Drummer, Lexa Woods, had her mouth to a person neck and they were bleeding profusely. Her eyes were slits, almost black and when she pulled away, she had sharp fangs drenched in blood. The girls tried to back up but Raven tripped over Clarke's foot and they fell into the room. Lexa's eyes shot to them and the person dropped, lifeless.

Clarke Griffin is the Blue Power Ranger, she has become the leader of her team as they defend the Polaris District. One day in a battle against their long term enemy the rangers suffered a massive defeat causing Clarke to take a step back, bearing the weight of the guilt..

Lexa Woods volunteers at the Natblida dojo teaching young children various forms of martial arts for self defense. The day that the rangers lose everything Lexa stumbles across a power coin of her own. Her first mission is to find the surviving rangers and new ones to rebuild the team as the power of creation itself comes under threat from powerful enemies.

Clarke and Lexa must fight their own demons, each other and countless monsters and they might just find something worth all of the pain and loss in the end.

Lexa Woods is a troubled teenager from the wrong side of the tracks. After getting arrested and thrown out of her house, she is taken in by her compassionate public defender, Marcus Kane. What she doesn't realize is he comes from a close-knit group of people in the wealthy, upper-class neighborhood of Newport Beach, Orange County, California. She meets his unconventional family which consists of his breadwinner wife Abby Griffin, their next door neighbor/surrogate daughter Raven Reyes, and his step-daughter who she may or may not be crushing hard on, Clarke Griffin. Six and a half years after Praimfaya, things on the Ring are more complicated than ever. With no way to get back to the ground and Lexa's situation growing ever more hopeless, Spacekru tries desperately to hold themselves and their family together in the face of overwhelming odds.

When sorrows seem to find you day after day
You leave a dream behind you every step you take
Well sometimes there is not an answer for the heartache we feel.
Sometimes we have to shatter, before we can heal.
Been a long and lonesome winter, with the curtains drawn.
The distraction of our struggle drowns out the cause.
But the sun shines warmer, when you are chilled to the bone.
The welcome is so much sweeter when the prodigal comes home.
When there are no words and everything hurts
This moment is in the making
So keep walking that line, another step and you'll find.
This life is for the taking, so take it now.
Soon we are going to look back to see what remains
When trouble is behind us and everything has changed.

"Why are you not doing anything?" Raven said, her voice clouded with anger.

"Because I am not really the person you are angry at, and my death won't matter because with the child's birth the union between Trikru and Skaikru will be sealed." The Commander said.

"Of course I am angry at you, I hate you because you killed him!" Raven said, pressing the knife even harder.

"No, you are angry because the man you loved became a monster, a murderer for another woman, because he died for her because he gave up his life to make sure she would be okay. You are angry because he did all of that for someone that isn't you." The Commander said, "I just enforced the law and I'd do the same for anyone that committed the same crimes as him, but if you think me unfair, go ahead, kill me."

When the first burst of breath attempts to leave her chest it is awkward and clumsy as if she is doing it for the first time.

Has she breathed before?

It's hard to tell with the lack of memories surfacing to her brain.

Suddenly she can breathe, it is relatively loud for the room and it stills everything almost instantly.

Then like a burst of energy people are running around, talking more like yelling as they crash into each other in an attempt to go where they need to.

Why can't she open her eyes to see where they are going? Her eye lids feel too heavy.

"Shit shit shit" a voice says nearing her, the person is distressed and panicked. "I will never hear the end of it if she is not the first thing you see" she adds onto her sentence.

Soon enough a hand is stroking her neck area, clumsy and panicked searching for something it cannot find. The finger eventually presses down on something and before she can barely breathe her vision fades back to black.
