"It was as if my brain couldn't understand what was happening". Even after all this time her words and wide eyes were raw with disbelief. "You remember the roller coaster? The one we all rode way too many times, that one summer? I was there. Right there at the top. At the edge. And for this one long moment..."

Clarke drew a slow breath in. She continued after a pause, but with words spoken more softly, almost with a sense of awe. "It was almost as if I could've touched the sky". Her eyes lost focus as the memory consumed her. "And then the world came crashing down."

"Clarke lost all perception of reality when those green eyes seemed to pierce her soul. They held such intensity and depth even in the dark, and Clarke suddenly realized why she had picked out that particular dress yesterday. Not because it was 'festive', but because it matched the exact color of Lexa's eyes."

Lexa runs a successful security company and her newest client is senatorial candidate Marcus Kane. She is beauty, poise and grace in its purest form, but what will happen when a blue eyed intern sweeps in and makes her question everything she believes in? Will Clarke's sun be able to melt the ice in Lexa's soul? And can Lexa save Clarke from her past?

You curse quietly again, pull a loose strand of hair from your eyes but you feel the door knob turn and so you step back, let the door swing open and you smile at her, and you let your eyes trail down her body, loosely wrapped in her oversized t-shirt, and your eyes narrow, if only for a moment, because it is yours. But you always liked it on her more. You think it suits her, you think it flatters her body, the soft of her thighs exposed to the cold and you eye the goose bumps that slowly spread over them and she must see your eyes wander, must see your eyes linger a moment too long further up, the cold catching your attention and so she pokes you hard in the chest, and she laughs, curls her hand around your wrist and tugs you inside, a soft kiss placed upon your lips.

Sometimes life throws a spanner in the works, sometimes it throws you a curveball and all you can do is roll with it, all you can do is embrace it and try and move on. Even if that's the last thing you really want to do. And for Lexa? Life just isn't fair.

"Shit."

It was going to be a long night.

Part 2 of Vampire and Werewolves

Lexa had heard the rumors of two brother hunters who specialized in hunting the supernatural community. Killing the innocent as well as the guilty without discrimination. They marched into towns and cities, hunted down families of vampires, packs of werewolves and slaughtered them all. Like their lives meant nothing. Like their experiences were nothing. Some of the vampires they killed had lived for hundreds of years, all of that history lost. They did not care of innocent lives, only of ridding the world of the "monsters" that walk it. They believed that humans were the only ones deserving of living on this earth. As if we "monsters" weren't here first.

Clarke and Lexa have been best friends for as long as they could remember. 2 peas in a pod, they were often called, and it was true. All they needed were each other and they were more than content with that. However, that was only until one day, Clarke decided that she no longer wanted Lexa in her life. So Clarke left her, with no reason whatsoever.

3 years later, Lexa, who eventually became used to spending her days alone, was surprised with the reappearance of the girl from her past: Clarke. Burdened with all the pent-up anger both at her former best friend and even herself, she was faced with the ultimate, life-changing question; should she let her back in? If so, what will happen to their friendship, if there was even some left? More importantly, what if what Lexa wanted was something more than friendship?

WARNING: This work is heavy laden with violence and assault.

There are days I cannot think, cannot get out of bed because I hear their voices. I see their faces.

Smartie. Princess. Majesty. Lucky. Skinny. Mother.

I see them running, crying, laughing, sleeping, sobbing. I see them silhouetted by flames. I hear their voices. Majesty used to sing. There are days I swear I hear her in my house, her voice drifting to me, high and watery. Smartie used to mumble to herself. I mumble to myself now, too. I sometimes pretend I am her. I talk to her and then I talk back to myself and she answers.

I will never get out of there.

I will never leave them - no, they will never leave me.

I will see their faces every day for the rest of my life.

And if there ever comes a day I do not remember them, I don't deserve to live a moment more.

Clarke woke up later that morning to a grumbling Octavia, "Clarke, I think I lost my shadow."

"Again, O?" Clarke mumbled from her spot tucked between the side of the futon and Octavia.

"Will you help me find it?"

"Of course," Clarke responded as the two friends continued to drift in hung-over lethargy.

"OH!" Octavia sat up before swearing and laying back down slowly. "Did you get that girl's number?"

Clarke froze. The rest of the night flashing back in pieces. Lips, green, lips, brown, lips. Fuck. That girl had been so shy and so hot. She bolted up from the futon ignoring Octavia's protests as well as her body's and sprinted up the stairs for her phone. Grabbing it off her nightstand she opened her texts, nothing. Fuck. She squinted at the small screen, clicking on her contacts and painstakingly scrolling through. Double fuck. She groaned as she slowly made her way back down the stairs, clutching the handrail for support. She suddenly felt deeply disappointed in herself and sort of like she needed to vomit.

Clark Griffin is a geek. None of the bitches at school had to tell her that, she always knew it. When the other girls wanted to giggle over magazines, she wanted to watch Star Trek.

When the other girls played with make-up, she dressed up as Buffy in the middle of May.

When the other girls wanted to gossip about boys, she wanted to write a new story in her journal. Now, Clark wants to make her latest story come alive and her friends and the new girl are happy to join in. But danger lurks out there when the geeks start acting happier than some think they have a right to, especially when their leader has a secret even she doesn't know yet.

The setting of this story takes place in the Star Wars galaxy. In this version, our own solar system also exists in the Star Wars Galaxy. In the SW galaxy geography of this story, Earth's location is in the Outer Rim Territories. The Terran Federacy is the name of the established government of Earth and the overall Sol System.

The story focuses on Clarke Griffin- a human citizen of the Terran Federacy. She was born and raised on Mars- a former Terran colony, and now, the second most populated body in the Sol System next to that of Earth. Her home is the Marsian city of Arcadia. Her mother is Abigail Griffin, and her father was Jake Griffin(deceased). Clarke grew up in Weather Hills, a suburb of Arcadia.

During in her senior year at Mount Weather Secondary, Clarke develops other post-secondary ambitions. Rather than staying on Mars after graduation, she chooses to attend school far away from the Sol System. Clarke attend the University of Cloud City where she meets and develops a mild girl crush on fellow student Lexa from the planet Trigeda, whom Clarke forms a bond with. Her relationship with Lexa slowly tightens and Clarke realizes that Lexa is the only one she wants.

Lexa was always one to hide her emotions as bet to avoid what we all fear the most, the hurt and pain. Wither it be from love or loss. She was raised and shaped as a child from her father who understood no love, felt no weakness, gave no affection and cared so very little... Well if he did care then he dared to never show it. Lexa became a leader, a Commander and someday in the near future not even her herself knew what she would become... A new way of life, changing what was into what shall be for years to pass. A new hope one that cannot be forgotten nor given up on. This is Her story and Her Loves Story because there's nothing more important than love in a world of hurt and pain to help you learn, to help you survive, to give you the strength to fight and to not waste even a second of your life because every last action, every last word, every last breath can make or break even the strongest, toughest, meanest person and change their whole world

"What are they doing?" Clarke asked Lexa, watching a line of grounder warriors walk into a tent together.

Lexa was surprised by Clarke's appearance next to her. She hadn't seen Clarke since they left Mount Weather. "It is customary after a war for a warrior to get a marking to remember it."

"Marking?" Clarke asked.

Lexa shrugged off her armor and pointed to the tattoo on her arm.

Clarke looked at the tattoo that she'd never noticed before and gently took Lexa's arm, looking it over. "Do you have more?"

Lexa nodded slowly. She looked to the tent. "I am going to make another." She knew that Clarke was naturally curious, "Would you like to watch?"

Clarke stood looking at her reflection in the glass window of Arkadia, an old school Italian restaurant, complete with checkered table cloths and candles in the center of every table. Her hair hung around her face in loose ringlets that landed just past her shoulders and covered the back of her red dress, which was the product of her after school trip to Goodwill.

She had spent the entire day worried that she wouldn't be able to find the perfect outfit, but all of her fears had been quenched the second that she stepped through the automatic sliding doors of the store. The dress had been on display and was the first thing that she had seen, and by some seemingly impossible coincidence, it was her size and fell well within her miniscule budget.

Another reflection appeared in the window and Clarke turned to see her date approaching and fidgeting with her long-sleeve clad forearm. She stopped as soon as she saw that Clarke was watching her. "H-hey Clarke." She said, her nerves causing her voice to waver.

Part 1 of Tethered

Her eyes wander over the brunette's face and figure without rush – without thinking twice. She notices the large bruise on the charming cheekbone and how dirty her skin and clothes are, making Clarke purse her lips and chuckle throatily and quietly. As she settles her eyes on the green ones again, she crosses her arms on her chest and slips her tongue over her teeth.

"So you are the one we've been trying to capture for more than a decade," She says in a husky tone of voice, not once letting her gaze falter.

Blue eyes contrast against pale skin and the princess finds herself temporarily lost in the color of them, staring like she is looking at something she is trying hard to analyze that remains just out of her grasp. They remind her of the sky, and each little white fleck in them is like a star. They are infinite looking and Lexa blinks a few times before she's finally able to start thinking clearly.

Tired of fleeing from both killers from the future and law officers in the present day, Abby Griffin resolves to go on the offensive against whatever new technological enemies may travel back in time to murder her teenaged daughter, Clarke, who is destined to become the saviour of mankind. In order to prevent the world from plummeting into chaos, Clarke must make a temporal leap to the time and place when the computer program set out to blow up the world was created. When she gets there, she realizes that the world she's been destined to save is already on its way to an seemingly inevitable war. But, Clarke can't stop it without the help of her mother, two familiar resistance fighters, a sharp-tongued mechanic, and a mysterious (and undeniably attractive) teenaged girl, who just so happens to be a reprogrammed T-900 sent from the future with only two missions: protect Clarke and Abby Griffin and prevent the apocalyptic genocide of humankind.

Lexa has had a very long and bad week, but Clarke coming home makes all the difference in the world.

How could such a beautiful thing like this exist, Lexa wondered. How could something be so perfect and so right for her, and make her feel things—strong things, she had never felt before? How could such a silly, clumsy, loud, 'organized-clutter' of a girl make her fall in love with her over and over again with just a simple look? She was almost the complete opposite of her, but all of those attributes and who she was fit perfectly where Lexa lacked—even if she expressed annoyance from time to time like when Clarke would leave her dirty clothes on the bathroom floor, or when she wouldn't put her makeup back in their proper place, or forget to buy more milk from the store, but she wouldn't want her any other way. She looked at it in a way that Clarke gave her a purpose. That she was made for her.

And that made her perfect.

Part 2 of Unbroken

Every summer the leaders of all twelve clans come together, gathering in Polis to celebrate the coalition. For two weeks they partake in the most sacred ceremonies of each people, telling stories, trading goods, enjoying the foods found across the Grounder Nation. The time has come, and the clan leaders have gathered, but this year there is an underlying current of tension, an electric buzz Lexa can feel converging in her city.

Clarke, Wanheda, Ubroukai, and the new Queen of the Ice Nation, leads her small group of people through the gates of Polis, and as Lexa's heart beats unsteadily, overjoyed to see her love again after three months apart, she can feel that tension double. Ten other clans wait to see what this girl they've heard so much about can really do, this girl who fell from the sky and changed the world. The Commander knows it won't be an easy feat, to get all twelve clans to accept the new queen. Add to that the fact she has invited the Skaikru to the celebrations, and she knows just one mistake could cause her coalition to crumble apart. As the hot summer sun beats down on them, Clarke and Lexa must stand together to face what could easily be their biggest challenge yet.

Part 1 of A Hundred-Thousand Loud Thoughts & Counting

“Daughter of death, the story starts,
one’s final breath, spirit long torn apart.
Old Evils rise to reap seeds long sown,
lest they fall to the fallen and all those forgotten.
Shall disarray sweep six half-blood heroes feet—
Blood, brutally split.
Mind, muddled by guilt.
Hand, too ready to kill.
Heart, bearing ill will.
And their eyes, blinded by hate.
Strung by spirit, or delivery to Death’s Door —
The doomed, set to conquer Fate.”

Clarke has a broken understanding of her place within the world after being rescued from her last dominant, and the only way her caseworker, Anya, can save her newest ward is to place her with her best friend Lexa Woods: the troubled last-surviving member of the powerful Woods family, and probably the most powerful dominant in the entire state too. Only time will tell if they will be able to rescue one another from their ever-present pasts...

"They moved together gracefully, no hiccup in sight. It was as if they'd been doing this for years. Falling into the grooves of waves emitting from the speakers effortlessly. No words were exchanged, they didn't need to be, instinct itself was enough to keep the momentum they built together steady as a calm on the ocean."

How Lexa met Clarke at Anya and Raven's engagement party.

On any given day, there's roughly 22,000 people at Harvard between undergraduates, graduate students, and other professionals. You could cross paths with the same person every day without ever knowing it - at the coffee shop, student union, bookstore, etc. With everyone's faces buried in their cellphones, missing a life changing interaction is more likely to occur than ever before. But, every now and then, something special, something unique happens.

Cross-Rivalry Romances – Summer Camp Style

a: ToriWritesStories

26/11/2015

Completed

Clarke Griffin, Octavia and Bellamy Blake, Raven Reyes, Lexa Woods and many others are all at Camp Unite - a supposedly better-than-average summer camp where kids from different extra curriculums and interests all come together and... do summer camp stuff? Nevertheless, they're there. The twist? None of them know each other, and turns out, this camp that's all about uniting and forming a better community is pretty divided. Pretty easy to get caught up in divisions that have been around for years - until a certain couple of people start forming crushes that cross the line of division.

"Oh my god! I'm so so sorry!" said the surprised stranger's voice.

"Seriously? Are you telling me you didn't see someone walking right in front of you?". I had to admit it wasn't fair since I hadn't seen her either. I was really stressed about the moving and I just wanted to get home and rest. When I looked up I met with the prettiest green eyes I've ever seen.

The brunette quickly started picking everything up. "I'm really sorry! I just got out from my apartment, I guess I wasn't paying attention. Please let me help you. Where do you need this?" She asked pointing the box. Okay, she really seemed sorry and just wanted to help, but I couldn't deal with all this right now. So I took it from her.

"Just forget it", and I turned around without even looking at her again. I took my keys from my pocket and finally opened the door to my new home.
