Part 1 of Early Morning Series

Clarke always refuses to get out of bed at Lexa's bequest and every morning is a battle over who will win, usually, the commander forfeits these little fights in favour of a few more minutes in her sky girl's arms... except for the rare occasion when there are more pressing matters to tend to.

Lexa's too enraptured by the paint splattered girl before her to care that said paint is also all over her favourite – formerly white – shirt. So enraptured, even, that it takes her way too long to notice the distraught look on the other girl's face and the ruined canvas in her hands.

Lexa, a dancer and a business major, offers to help Clarke re-do her ruined final project.

Part 3 of bought, owned, earned

It's been six years since she walked out on Lexa, knowing she had broken her heart, knowing she would cry and mull over the words she had said, words that were too hard, words she didn't have the right to say, words Lexa didn't deserve to hear. It's been six entire years and Clarke had never expected Lexa to wait for her, but something inside of her coils tightly when she thinks that she might never be able to make Lexa understand how much she changed her life, willingly or not, knowingly or not.

She owes it to herself to knock on Lexa's door and wait and pray she will let her get the words out before all hell breaks loose, before she kicks and screams and punches Clarke like she's pretty sure Lexa wants to - if she were Lexa she'd want her head on a stick.

Gritting her teeth so hard she's half afraid of grinding them to dust, Clarke raises her fist and knocks on the door.

The panther didn't seem to have noticed it at first, but when the blonde let a cry out and stared at the blue hexagon, it moved its head closer, sniffing the strange object.

"Don't you dare!" Clarke shouted at the panther [...] The animal growled at her in a challenge and shook its body, dislodging the weapon, before swallowing the implant, its long pink tongue wrapping around it.

The cry that tore Clarke's throat echoed around the forest, so powerful and raw that it surprised the predator. With one last look at the girl, it turned around and took off among the trees.

"NOOOO! Come back! Lexa!" the blonde screamed, falling on her knees, the tears blurring her sight. But it was too late, the panther was gone, having disappeared into the forest, taking with it all that was left of the green-eyed brunette that had stolen her heart.

n. the bittersweetness of having arrived here in the future, where you can finally get the answers to how things turn out in the real world—who your baby sister would become, what your friends would end up doing, where your choices would lead you, exactly when you'd lose the people you took for granted—which is priceless intel that you instinctively want to share with anybody who hadn't already made the journey, as if there was some part of you who had volunteered to stay behind, who was still stationed at a forgotten outpost somewhere in the past, still eagerly awaiting news from the front.

What started this tradition? Thinking of its origin brought Lexa back to the arena, guiding her legs where the remaining nightbloods stood. Some nightbloods bitterly theorized Titus's lessons of duty surrounding the origins of the conclave were a lie. Instead, at the death of the first commander, it was greed, not duty, which prompted slaughter. If that is the case, she wondered how many of them ran. Luna in particular was fond of that theory. How, she would always ask out of Titus's earshot, did greed turn into duty? Lexa rarely bothered herself with hows and whys. Things simply were.

It is only when Anya insists on bringing her cousin, who has only just moved to town and doesn't really have any friends, that the night, which was supposed to be Clarke's night, takes a surprising turn.

Or:

The one where Clarke and Lexa broke up before going to college and slowly learned how to live their lives without the other. Fast forward nine years later when they meet again at the opening of Clarke's art gallery. A lot has changed over the past years; Clarke has evolved from the cocky, rebellious teenager to a sophisticated business woman and Lexa from the popular high school sweetheart to a successful and stern lawyer. Apparently, Lexa is also a top now.
