25/03/2020

Completed

Lexa's a useless lesbian who instantly falls for a pretty blonde at the airport who happens to be deaf. If only Lexa could stop mixing up her signs, she might have a chance of scoring her number.

From an anonymous prompt on tumblr: the sign for airport and the sign for i love you in ASL are the same handshape and location in the body with different motions. Concept: "I airport you."

Part 1 of Tale of Two Commanders

Clarke would do anything to save her people. Even if it meant giving up her soul...or leaving the love of her life.

It's been two months since Clarke returned to Arkadia and the barricade went into effect. Two months of living under the terrifying rule of Chancellor Pike, who will stop at nothing to get vengeance. When the barricade falls Clarke finds herself summoned back to Polis. Back to Lexa. But Clarke isn't the same person she was when she left, she's lost her way. When new and deadly threats rear their head Clarke must figure out, without the mask of Wanheda, just who she truly is.

As Lexa walks past, giving the dog a wide berth, she spots a figure beside it. A girl with braided blonde hair stretches out on the park bench, fingers tangled in the dog's thick fur. She frowns softly. Usually the homeless people Lexa sees are older males with scruffy beards, tugging shopping carts filled with cans. But this girl on the bench, her golden hair streaming over her back, looks so out of place that Lexa almost stops. Most homeless tend to stay near the city, yet here she is, in the middle of the forest.

Clarke is about to have a date with Finn, who she met on the internet. However, she doesn't know what Finn looks like. All she knows is that Finn has brown hair and will be waiting on a bench by the lake in the park, wearing something red and with a book. When she doesn't see anyone at first, she thinks she's stood up.

Lexa puts her red tank top on and goes to the park with a book, to read and clear her mind. She sits down at her favorite spot, the bench by the lake. Suddenly a beautiful blonde greets her and calls her Finn. Quickly Lexa winds up being mistaken for someone named Finn. She wants to tell the blonde the truth, but for some reason she can't or not yet.

The question is... When will Lexa tell her and how will Clarke react? Or what if Clarke finds out before Lexa tells her?

"The green-eyed girl struck, and without thinking Clarke raised her blade to clash against hers. They moved in a constant circle around each other, one never quite overpowering the other. Soon the battle fell away around her and she saw only the girl's fierce eyes, heard only the beating of her own racing heart."

Part 1 of All I want (is the taste that your lips allow)

Falling in bed with Lexa is as easy as falling in love with her, but it is infinitely less terrifying. Clarke doesn't need to be good; doesn't need to feel her heart again after living without it for so long.

Lexa is calm through all of Clarke's storms, and Clarke never knows about the scars she leaves.

Lexa's life is a bit of an awkward mess. Someone keeps stealing the gym around the corner from her apartment building while she's busy at the actual gym and ruining all her hard work. Clarke's life isn't much better. She still can't work up the guts to talk to the hot chick she sees every morning on the elevator. When they finally realize they've been after the same gym, it might just be a rivalry for the ages... or something better.

Which is where you come in," Staring into her eyes, "I would like to make a deal with you."

"Oh? And what could that possibly be?"

"Be my personal servant."

"And what, do tell, does the job entail?"

"You would look after my home, warm my bed at night, and satisfy my every need. Don't worry, I won't make impossible requests. Food and accommodations will be provided by me, and yes, I'm going to pay you. Part 1 of Love Feels Like War

Clarke Griffin hates Lexa Woods with a passion; at least, that's what she tells herself to keep from falling for someone that she knows will just break her heart in the end.

They aren't meant to be soulmates.

This isn't supposed to be happily ever after.

Princess Clarke of Arkadia has been visiting the kingdom of Trikru for some time now with her mother. She considers herself the most proper of young princesses, her only vice being the lure of freshly baked pastries in the palace kitchen. Her lifelong rival and fellow princess, Lexa of Trikru, is the opposite of everything Clarke considers a princess should be. She plays sword-fighting, runs around in commoners clothing and never wears her tiara as she gallivants around the grounds on her adventures.

When Clarke revisits the palace of Trikru years later on her engagement tour, she discovers the rivalry no longer remains, and the tension is entirely different.

Takes place after the war. Lexa didn't leave, and they won the war. But some reapers and few of the MM (who got the bone marrow treatment) managed to escape. (Around 60-70)

There was an explosion in the mountain (Don't ask how, where, when why, idk, it happened) and main systems were damaged. Raven is working on it with Sinclair and some other people and until the repairs are done The Sky People are staying in Camp Jaha and then plan to move to the mountain.

Most of the clans left a week after the war, but Lexa and the Woods Clan stayed, searching for the reapers and MM.

Abby is worried about that the alliance will not hold without the common enemy, (the leader of some clans are on the same view) and many agree with her, even if they are still fighting against reapers with the help of grounders.

Welcome to the life of Clarke Griffin. She's a girl like any other. Her mom a council member of the Ark and her dad was a chief engineer. This didn't tend to mean much except that that while the other kids were at the playground or having ice cream she was learning how to diffuse bombs and how to pick locks. Not to say she didn't ever have ice cream. She just had to earn it, usually through executing a correct grab or tackle.

Clarke Griffin, rising sophomore at Polis College, has just taken on a Resident Assistant position, thanks to her big cousin Bellamy. She's excited, nervous, and a little overwhelmed, especially when she realizes Lexa Woods (you know, the Junior she had been low-key crushing on only all of last year) is not only one of the head RAs, but also living directly two floors above her. Between controlling her chill, learning the ropes, still kind of healing from her high school sweetheart dying, and desperately trying to keep her other cousin, Octavia, out of any serious trouble, things are bound to get interesting, and quickly.

Part 3 of We deserve a softer story, my love

"And I'm so tired of fighting and waiting for 'someday' and waiting for loving you." Clarke continued, letting go of one of her hands. And internally Lexa wanted to protest at the loss of contact, but before she could react, Clarke's hand was posed on her cheek and despite her glistening eyes she looked fiercer than everyone that Lexa had ever seen in her life. "I want more. More time, more you."

And it was so simple but it made her feel infinite and Lexa couldn't help but smile again. Clarke stroked her cheek, her blue eyes were reamed with red but they were oh so shining. She was beautiful. And in this moment, Lexa was reminded of poems before the war about eyes shining brighter than the stars and bittersweet smiles carrying the weight of worlds and tragedies. Lexa wasn't any good at drawing or at writing poems, really. But if she had been, she thinks that all of her art would have been Clarke. Clarke's sun kissed hair. Clarke's chapped lips, her thin smiles, teasing smiles or loving ones. Clarke's eyes sometimes soft like a summer sky, other times their blue turning an almost metallic grey like a storm. Clarke, Clarke, Clarke.

"She heard a soft chuckle from her side and looked up to see Clarke staring at her with a fond look. She blushed and looked away. She had never been given a fond look. Never. Maybe Finn had given her something similar from time to time but she was sure it was more a look of pride than one of fondness. She wondered if this is what normal children with normal parents felt like when their parents looked at them. Raven was too young when her momma left her for her to remember if she had ever looked at her like that. But she quickly decided that she liked to be looked at like that. Like she meant something to someone."

When the Dropship lands, it becomes painfully obvious that there has been a slight mishap. Slight mishap (noun): a rather unfortunate scenario in which the corrupt idiots on the Ark send the Delinquents 50 miles north of their target, into the heart of cold, barren, miserable Azgeda territory, rather than the lush forest teeming with unicorns and rainbows they were promised. Whoops.

General Clarke and the Delinquents - those remaining after five years of toil and hardship climbing Azgeda's ranks - are tasked with appeasing the Commander in Polis on the eve of what could very quickly dissolve into an inter-Coalition civil war between their two clans. As she struggles to navigate the murky waters between Azgeda and the Commander's fiery rage, Clarke must hide her true goal: Dethrone Nia and reclaim Azgeda. (Of course, there's always the side quest: Give Nia, Queen of Bitches, a taste of her mind.) But now, the Commander is an unknown variable. Will she aid Clarke in her coup, or remain loyal to the Coalition... and Nia?

Part 1 of Days & Ways: The Art Of Scraping By

Two moms, four kids. What could possibly go wrong? The Griffin-Woods family seemingly has the perfect life, at least until Lexa's (over?)zealousness as NYC's top young prosecutor means she starts making some very dangerous enemies whose only goal is to remove her from the equation. By any means necessary.

It'd been over a year since then. Since she'd seen the woman she loved lying battered and comatose in the hospital bed.

When she'd woken from it, her family had told Lexa first-hand the damage the accident she'd caused had done to the blonde – and then told her to stay the fuck away.

She did. Because when blue eyes had opened from her coma, she remembered nothing.

Not her family.

Not her friends.

Not Lexa.

Not herself.

She'd forgotten everything. Including the reason she remembered nothing, all being down to the woman she still lay atop of having tripped and knocking them both to the floor.

Lexa had erased her entire life and in essence, killed Clarke Griffin.

"Cl..." Thankfully before she can stupidly say Clarke's name out loud and confuse the poor woman, she passes out.

Science is a miraculous thing. It's facts and figures. It's something you can see in front of you. It's physical. It's an infinite number of atoms clashing together to create everything in existence. It's proof... Religion is a state of mind. It's people coming together. It's a set of rules for a group to follow. It's spiritual. It's a peace that there is something more out there, something that science cannot explain. It's belief.

If you were to ask Anya why the Nightbloods' are capable of transforming into their inner animal, she would tell you it is a gift from the Spirit. The selected few chosen to protect their people; whether that be with large wings scouting the sky, able to see a potential threat from miles away or soft, silent paws tracking seamlessly through the forest... If you were to ask Raven why the Nightbloods' are capable of transforming into their inner animal, she would tell you that the radiation from the nuclear war caused a genetic mutation in order to adapt and live in new surroundings. She'd tell you it was evolution.

Really, Clarke just wants to know why this random panther with bright yellow and green eyes keeps following her. And why that particular shade of green seems so familiar.

That's when the door to the pit opens, flooding the room with light, legionaries hold the door open standing on guard as a young woman enters the pit. Lexa's stomach flips at the sight of her, she was certain that she was Venus, or that she had been blessed by Venus herself, because her beauty knew no bounds. Her hair was golden, like the wheat fields found in the countryside of Rome, and her eyes were as blue as the clear oceans - they sparked, like the clear water that filtered into Rome through the beautifully constructed aqueducts - she was wearing a toga, clearly she was of some kind of social status.

Part 2 of We deserve a softer story, my love

Sometimes, in between the chaos of our world, time stills. Our lives pauses and I really don't know what to do with myself. It's strange, the quiet... It makes me restless.

I'm not really used to be static anymore, I think. Being static reminds me of space, of the airlock door and my father floating, lost in between planets. Of a cell painted with untouchable dreams, of being trapped in a spaceship hurling to the ground. It makes me think of sterilized beds in Mount Weather, of restless pacing in a tent before war, of pressing a button and making a Mountain fall.

"Sometimes I wonder if my keryon isn't too bruised for peace," I can't help myself saying.

"Never," Lexa says without a pause, her eyes on mine, unfaltering, and fingers woven with mine.

Lexa's face softens as she looks down at Clarke. She reaches out to stroke the strands of hair that have fallen out of Clarke's bun.

"Dying's not that bad, once you get used to it."

It's barely a whisper, and if Clarke's senses weren't attuned to everything that is Lexa, she may have missed it. The statement is unsettling, but it's the empty wistfulness of Lexa's voice that makes Clarke's chest feel like it's caving in. 3 years later, Lexa is still hopelessly, desperately in love with Clarke and she limited herself in the corner, very much content at loving Clarke from afar. Even their friends were painfully aware of how obvious Lexa is and how oblivious Clarke is. Nobody knows what goes on in Clarke's mind. War is brewing. The coalition is weakening under the strain of the Ice Queen as she threatens the authority of the Commander. Clarke, blissfully unaware of the politics travels to Polis to improve on her studies in medicine, leaving behind her Mother and Father in TonDC. She hasn't spoken to her childhood friend Lexa since she was called upon to lead, but Lexa needs an able healer by her side now more than ever.

She remembers that day in the garden. The one Lexa had kept hidden for only herself but decided to share with Clarke.

'The world has granted you the gift and curse of leadership, and you match it at every obstacle. No challenge, too great. There is no one more worthy of honor and worship than you, Clarke, Heda of the sky people.'

A small smile crawls along her features as she recalls that moment. The one in which Clarke had broken down and cried in front of Lexa for the first time. The one, where she'd finally allowed the Commander to embrace her since she'd sworn her fealty to her.

Clarke caresses her palm against the comatose warrior's arm. A sob breaking through her chest, her eyes closed. "I wish..." She sniffles, "...I wish I had known you sooner..."

This woman was driving her mad! "Seeing as I'm the artist, the artwork you are currently looking at is titled 'The Ark'. It is set in the post apocalyptic future where we will all run out of oxygen and left stranded in space on a space station, which is 'The Ark'. It is the first artwork in a series I'm working on. I would be happy to tell you more about it but the gallery is closing soon and we don't have much time left. If you want to buy this painting, the original selling price is $255,000 but I don't mind negotiating it to a lower price. Just a, uh, broke artist here." "Anya," The commander of the 12 clans whined, "I want ice-cream,"

"Commander," Anya said, looking amused, "I don't think now is the time,"

"Ughhh, what is it now?"

"The sky girl is here to see you,"

Lexa groaned and swung her legs off of the armrest, facing Clarke.

Low grumbles of settling metal and crumbled stone echoed through the caverns, like catacombs homing lost souls, with a select few still fighting. Broken and battered, Lexa lays her head on a concrete slab, trying not to think of how much rubble exists above or below her, or whether or not anyone else survived the fall.

Clarke and Lexa are buried alive after an earthquake brings down the building they were both working in, and it is a matter of time, luck, and human will whether not the pair will survive. That, and whether anything good could come from such a horrifying tragedy.

Her Mother, the head surgeon at DC memorial had done her best to keep young Clarke out of it for as long as she could, despite finding her hands covered with the blood of mobsters as she stitched up knife slashes and operated on bullet wounds without questions. The less she knew, the safer her family would be. Jake Griffin, Clarke's father fought his own battles to keep Clarke safe. He had been an ecowarrior, fighting against big companies who sought to destroy the forests around the state in the name of expansion. It's ten years before the 100 arrived on Earth.

This is a story about what was happening on the ground at that time. It mostly revolves about our beloved Grounders from the show in their younger days. Lexa and her family are in the center of attention, but Anya, Indra, Roan and others are also important to the plot.

There is a war happening and the Coalition from the show is slowly taking shape. Also some romance, friendships, family bonds.

Clarke tried one last time to offer her a cup of coffee - even tea - because she hadn't had enough time to get to know this woman. Clarke wanted to know; why she was a hitwoman, how she became one, why she had followed Clarke. A part of her mind - a part that always kept a list of whatever doctors had ever said about her... condition - well, a part of her brain wondered if Clarke formed a new obsession with this odd woman - a new question her mind needed to answer, explore, understand.

Her old doctors would have nervously laughed. So many of them and so few medical conclusions of what was wrong with her. Some of them had even used the overused term psychopathy and Clarke had bit back a snort. Paranoia was also a common one but - not quite right even then. Clarke wasn't paranoid, she was just... obsessed.

And this woman.

Who was this woman who held forests in her eyes and darkness in her soul?

"Come upstairs", she tried again.

The woman shook her head.

"What's your name?"

Green eyes looked at her with amusement, an eyebrow lifted mockingly.

"Not a word to anyone, Clarke. Got it?"

In the wake of Clarke's rise to the throne of the Ice Nation, she is left with a seemingly insurmountable obstacle, an unconquerable mission - the task of finding the person she'd lost somewhere along the line.

Believed to be dead by everyone she ever cared about, Clarke must now face the reality of an existence crafted from the very source of her pain, confront the deception that had been guiding her steps for so long now.

How could she possibly handle it all knowing the things she'd done? How was she supposed to exist in this world with a face so unrecognizable to even her own eyes?

How was she supposed to come face-to-face with the one person in existence who could legitimately destroy her?

Clarke Griffin is biding her time until she's free, puttering through her classes at Ark Naval Academy, knowing that when she graduates and finishes her minimum service, she'll be free to live her life the way she wants, through art.

Anya Birch is relentless in her goal to be a pilot for the navy, having spent her life scraping together every ounce of time and energy to make that dream come true. She hates all the free passes Clarke gets due to her family, while Clarke hates Anya's hostility and thinks the pilot's an overdose away from flunking out.

Clarke sometimes feels on her own despite the fact that she has friends and she has to share her space head with a homicidal spirit. (Only the bad ones, it says)

She doesn't feel broken although maybe a bit shattered. A bit misunderstood and... empty. But she thinks it's alright, everybody would be if they lived her life.

Lexa is kind and wants to help everyone. She is a beacon of light for some people, the one that keeps them from doing reckless decisions. She knows it and they do too. Some say that she is godsend but she brushes them off, saying that everybody should be doing this kind of thing. But she is aware that there are things in this world that aren't kind to people. And she does her best compensate.

When these two meet, how will it go? Sometimes, the evil hides in the things we expect the least. And maybe they will learn it to their own depends.

This is 'Into The Storm' with Lexa Forrest, welcome and hold on.

Lexa is a stormchaser (though she prefers the term 'researcher') and her Discovery Channel show just keeps getting bigger and bigger. She grew up dreaming about studying the sky, and at 28 she's at the cusp of her career, reporting to her adoring fanbase all about the indomitable forces of nature. There's no time for anything -or anyone- else.

Clarke is a stormchaser (she has as much tattooed over her ribs) for the local Action News. Whip smart and committed to her research, she lives for the thrill every time the sky thunders. But pushing 26 in this industry has her constantly trying to stay relevant, to outdo herself, running straight into danger to get that perfect shot.

Their field of work is small, and their clashing rivalry inevitable and fierce. But Clarke and Lexa are about to realize what they feel for each other can be just as strong and unpredictable as the storms they chase.

Part 2 of Girls like girls like boys do

Tonight is Lexa's first date with Clarke, and instead of trying to find the perfect outfit or hairstyle, she's Googling tricks for faking appendicitis.

The onslaught of nerves this morning was unexpected. It's not like Lexa's never gone on a date before; she's in her twenties and she's had girlfriends before, plural. She's had sex with girls who were her girlfriends and girls who were strangers. She's had hook-ups, she's had drunken kisses on nights out, she's had feelings for girls who were right for her and girls who weren't.

But this is different.

Lexa and Clarke go on their first date and attempt to get to know each other.

Raven-expert in everything technical and mechanical. 18/19 yrs old and wants to design light sets for concerts. She breaks into a local venue for research.

Anya-the musical artists manager. 22/23 yrs old. Has a plan but doesn't share like ever. Queen of poker face.

Clarke-the accomplice to the break in. Distracts security with that good earth cleavage.

Lexa-the musical artist. Think G-Eazy type in terms of fashion. Loves what she does but questions some of her decisions.

Lexa woods is a literary genius. Everyone knows it, except for her parents, who never even so much as glance at her. They think she's attending law school, in reality she is attending a fine arts school for a degree in english lit. She thinks she's got it easy until a certain blonde haired, blue eyed, artist comes in and turns her black and white world into a mosaic of blood red.

Clarke Griffin suffers from a condition called Multiple Personality Disorder. She thought that her condition had been cured after she solved the murder of her father, but it is back, and it's looking to kill.

Lexa Woods thought life was getting slightly easier, until she was dragged into a whirlpool of fear, dread, love, and confusion.

Anya tries to do what she can to help Clarke Griffin, while supporting Lexa, and remaining level in her own head.

"There are two types of frauds, Clarke. Those who pretend to be magical and those who pretend to be common. The first ones are fools, the latter are liars. My job is to expose both."

Clarke is a witch who pretends to be a street magician and dupes people with her tricks. Lexa exposes fraudulent magicians: both the ones who say they're magical and those who cover that fact. She's hired to investigate Clarke.

My mom is driving me nuts, and I haven't been out of the house for anything other than classes since June," she emphasized, her eyes going wide as she reached forward to grip Lexa's wrist. Lexa could feel her heart jump at the light touch, her eyes going to catch Clarke's. "I need a vacation."

Lexa paused, but when Clarke didn't go any further into an explanation, she sighed.

"And?"

"And we need to go on a roadtrip."

Clarke could make Lexa laugh on any day of the week. Her smile brought so many feelings into Lexa's soul that she almost couldn't contain the feeling. Clarke's eyes are so blue that Lexa could drown in them if she wanted to.

But, she can't. Clarke is her best friend and the thought of possibly ruining such a sacred friendship they have built the last 4 years always pushed Lexa away from those thoughts she has of Clarke.

Will they overcome this fear to find true happiness in each other? Only time will tell.

'Don't get any ideas. Trust me when I say the new sheriff isn't going to let you get away with anything, not even jaywalking.'

'Ma!' Aden laughed, he turned back in his seat and was about to unpause his game when one more question rose to his mind. 'What did you love most about the town?'

Clarke.

Lexa gripped the steering wheel until her knuckles turned white. The answer reverberated around her head as her heart banged out the quiet rhythm that had been silently playing since she left her hometown, finally unleashed and screaming it's answer at full volume.

Ten years later, Lexa is back in town with her newly adopted son Aden to escape the demons she's accumulated since leaving the town of 'Skyark'. She is hoping that by returning to her hometown she can provide Aden the childhood he deserves away from the nightmares of their past.

Clarke has never been able to escape thoughts of her green eyed childhood best friend. And is finally realising she would do anything to get her back.

"You don't deserve just one big thing to show you my love, you don't deserve a week's full.

You deserve every single moment for the rest of our lives. You deserve an eternity where you understand just how incredible you are, and just how happy you make me."

or,

Lexa plans the perfect proposal for the woman she loves.

Clarke is a doctor, Lexa is a robo sapiens. They fall in love against all odds in the backdrop of a dying world.

Clarke catches Lexa's hand and presses it firmly against her cheek, leaning into it as she flutters her eyes closed. "This isn't possible," she croaks out, her voice breaking at the last syllable.

"It is. I feel the same way, Clarke."

"That's not possible," Clarke shakes her head.

The hand presses against Clarke's cheek held her still. It is all the warning she has before she feels soft lips pressing against her own. Instinctively, she presses harder, basking at the contact, at the surprising warmth and softness, and how her entire body just felt so alive, like all this time she was just living a half-life and now, she can finally begin to live for real. Clarke breaks off the kiss with a gasp. Her eyes flutter open to find Lexa looking at her. "If it is you and I, anything is possible."

It had been four years since Lexa's supposed death, and Clarke still refused to believe that she was gone.

Clarke felt it right down to her very bones. In her every breath that Lexa was somehow still alive. That the love of her life had not perished in that fire like the FBI had claimed. Her heart would know. Clarke was certain that her wife was out there somewhere, and she had made it her life's mission to find out the truth.

Clarke Griffin had always been more than a bit strange.

At least, that's what the residents of her sleepy Massachusetts town she grew up in always said.

Clarke herself never really felt any different than anyone else as a child. She liked playing and pretending and dancing and shouting, she liked toys and arts and crafts time and hanging upside down on the monkey bars. But somewhere between kindergarten and fifth grade, almost every single one of her peers decided there was something... creepy about her.

In a world where soulmates were marked with the same tattoo, you’d think that it would be easier finding the one. But life’s a bitch. And love, its best friend.

In a world of 7.6 billion people, few were lucky enough to encounter their soulmate. The rest, lived their lives knowing that they could wait to find the one, or they could settle for a love that’s almost there yet not the best they could have.

And mind you, that happened a little too often. Clarke Griffin was currently in that situation.

Settling for a half-there love in a relationship with someone who didn't have the same tattoo as her.

Enter Lexa Woods, the newest student at TonDC and Clarke is distracted. More so because no one gets on her nerves more than Lexa. And it doesn't help that she is one attractive young woman.

Clarke finally finds the courage to ask her charming colleague to go out with her, but things do not go as planned. Or maybe they do, too much.

It's just a coincidence that can turn into a huge problem and, of course, it's all Raven's fault.

Lexa seemed to have an instant hatred towards Clarke, although there was no apparent reason as to why. Clarke, however, took an instant infatuation towards the girl. She'd find herself staring in class, and looking for her during meals at the great hall. Once Clarke had bumped into a shelf at the library, sending the whole row spiraling downwards, because she'd spotted Lexa sitting in one of the tables, the light shining so perfectly off of her cheekbones, her lips pursed adorably, her eyes following her finger along the text she'd been reading. God, anyone else had been ruined for her ever since.
