"What exactly is this place?"

Lexa cocks her head. "How'd you find this place without knowing what it is?"

"A friend told me to come here. Her name's Raven."

"Ah." The group lets out a collective noise of understanding. At Clarke's confused expression, Lexa explains.

"Raven found us by accident one night when she was walking through the back alley. She saw Anya come in through the wall and followed her. We couldn't exactly hide, but luckily she was cool about it and didn't report us to the local hunter group. She actually helped some of our witches set up more wards to keep us hidden."

Witches. Clarke shakes her head slightly. "So, what, this place is a hideout for supernatural beings?"

Lexa tosses her head back and laughs, the noise rippling through the air like music. Clarke freezes a little and pointedly ignores the amused glances from Niylah and Catra.

"Of a sort," Lexa tells her, smiling gently. "This part is affectionately referred to as the Fang Club. Jag's is mostly a cover for this. It's a place where those that might be hunted or shunned in the outer world can let loose a little, enjoy life. A safe haven."

The day that Lexa met Clarke, she found out about her two rules. The first, was to never fall in love. The second, was to never let anyone fall in love with her. But as it turns out, rules are broken everyday and they both end up falling head over heels in love with each other. The reason Clarke had those rules is a secret, until one day she can't hide it anymore, and after some very big events, decides to leave Lexa. She thinks it's what is best for Lexa, so she leaves without so much as a word of where she is going.

Lexa searches for Clarke for three years. She is a writer and decides to tell their story, in hopes that Clarke will read it and come back to her, or at least let her know she is ok.

What happens when they come face to face again, and will hearing their story told from Lexa's side help Clarke realize they can be together and happy. Can Lexa convince Clarke that she wants to be with her no matter what, and that together they can make it work?

The emptiness and foreignness of the room is bittersweet. Under these circumstances, it's better than being at your own house, surrounded by ghosts in every corner. There are no memories to haunt you here. It's like a fresh canvas, but you don't want to paint anymore.

or, Clarke is put in foster care and meets Lexa.
