Last update: 01/08/2019

The Third World War had wiped out 98% of the earth's population.

Everyone lived in government built compounds that were gated and manned by soldiers.

The government was ruled by an Alpha prime known as the commander along with a panel of experts that ran different divisions.

The surviving population had been quickly brought under government control. With time human kind had rebuilt society. The things that had failed to survive from the old world were democratic governments, freedom of speech and equality. The United States was under rule of a totalitarian government. Every resource was controlled and sanctioned.

This is the world that Omega Clarke Griffin was born into and now a few days before her first heat she was to be mated to the most fierce and powerful Alpha Prime to date Commander Lexa Woods.

"Let's get you up," the woman moves to help her, but Lexa stops her mid-movement. Now that she's closer, she's sure.

"I know you," she says, not surprised to see the woman freeze. "Well, not actually know you. But I've seen you around town."

More specifically, Lexa last saw her on Wednesday, sitting in the window of the coffee shop, immersed in a book, twirling a strand of her blonde hair around a finger while the coffee next to her was getting cold. Lexa would know because she had served her.

The blonde looks at her now, narrowing her eyes as if to focus. She frowns and Lexa could swear she pales too.

"You're the server."

Clarke Griffin is an established artist who owns a gallery in Polis, outside Washington, D.C. Lexa Woods is an attorney based in New York City. She and Clarke have been friends for years, since they met in college, and there have always been sparks, but for whatever reasons, the timing just wasn't right, though their friends have been shipping them practically forever and trying to get them together.

Finally, this Christmas, they've each decided it's time to tell the other how they really feel. So they both come up with rather elaborate plans to do just that (because Lexa, amirite?), made easier because Lexa will be in Polis.

But, of course, when you've got secret plans and a bunch of well-meaning friends stirring the pot, things might get a little confusing.

Clarke makes the decision to leave Camp Jaha, a decision made from righteousness in her eyes. As Clarke attempts to survive in the wilderness alone with little to help her survive, she begins to question her morals while losing her sanity. When a group of stray reapers find her stranded, they attack, leaving Clarke to fight for her life...or choose to end her suffering.

Meanwhile, Lexa's guilt weighs heavy on her in Polis, making the decision to find Clarke and right her wrongs. When coming across a group of reapers attacking what is seemingly a stranger, Lexa decides to step in, hoping to restore justice to her name. With a group of ravaging monsters against her, Lexa drags the stranger to a stranded building in the distance, latching the doors from within as an attempt to save them both. Lexa soon realizes that her bloodied victim is Clarke Griffin, and they are now trapped within the shell of Mount Weather with no way to escape. Can they cooperate and make amends? Or are they trapped in a steel battle cage?

Clarke Griffin and Lexa Woods probably wouldn't have met if it wasn't for that small group chat on stan twitter. They're both in completely different fandoms and Lexa has never made it appoint to exactly make friends online. She just liked to tweet, and Clarke appreciated her tight knit group of people never much looking to expand it. But they did meet and although they don't live close to each other, both residing on different sides of the USA, that doesn't stop them from falling in love with each other. It's not easy being in love with someone that is so faraway, or at least feels so faraway, it makes it even harder when so many of their followers come together in the desire to see them as a couple. Will their love be able to handle the pressure of outsiders and distance or will they crumble before they

///"If we kill Clarke, she will only become a martyr." Hannah Green looked down at the ground, pulling her jacket tightly around her. If only the circumstances had been different, maybe none of this would have happened.

Pike's lips tightened. "Then find someone else to do it. A senseless murder or an accident; as long as it's not traced back to us. And in time, the world will forget."//

Lexa is warned by Costia in a dream that people are trying to kill Clarke. Can Lexa save her and figure out her emotions in the process? Will Clarke meet a similar fate as Costia?

Clarke and Lexa have both been selected as potential contestants in the first ever season of MasterChef High School, and they're both determined to come out the victor and claim the grand prize.

While they wait to compete for an official place in the competition, Clarke approaches Lexa and strikes up a conversation, and neither of them can deny the instant connection they feel. But can their decision to allow themselves to be "frenemies" survive the fact that in the end, only one of them can claim the ultimate prize? In the heat and pressure of the kitchen, with the eyes of their fellow competitors, the judges, and the entire nation on them, could that initial spark kindle into something more?

Clarke was looking directly at her as Abby introduced the new menu, rhyming off all the pumpkin spice beverages, and the blonde gave an eyeroll. Lexa had to stifle a laugh. Although they'd worked together nearly every Thursday for three years, the girls wouldn't describe themselves as friends, but one thing they bonded over was their shared hatred of pumpkin spice drinks, and this year, Lexa was hoping to turn this passion into a game.

"How do you feel about bets, Clarke?" the brunette asked, sidling up to her colleague as they wiped down the front counter. Clarke raised an inquisitive eyebrow and Lexa knew she'd piqued her interest. If there was something she'd learned about Clarke in all their years, it was that she was competitive.

Lexa has three memories.

Her first memory, is her name being said in desperation. The memory is black, but she knows it's her name for some reason. The feeling that the desperate voice is calling out for her is too strong for it to be anyone else's name but her own.

Her second memory, is another's name... Clarke. A girl maybe. This memory is also black, but Lexa can hear herself saying it as if this person single handedly meant the most to her.

She says it so gentle, full of love, and Lexa's heart aches whenever this memory is somehow triggered.

Her third memory, is of eyes. Blue eyes. Blue eyes that seem deep and struggling to find something. They are probably the most beautiful that Lexa has ever seen, even though she can't remember much from whatever previous life she may have lived. This memory appears to Lexa the most, and is the only one that isn't black. And somehow Lexa just knows that these blue eyes also belong to Clarke.

Or Lexa awakes in the woods a while after the City of Light was destroyed and struggles to remember who she is and where she belongs in a universe that makes no sense. She survives on little memory, and slowly gains it back when she meets Clarke again.

"Maybe someday, you and I will owe nothing more to our people."

What could their lives be if they had nothing and no one to take responsibility for other than themselves? If life isn't just about surviving?

Would things finally fall into place?

Would they finally get to love each other without holding anything back or anything getting in between?

Clarke feels a pair of strong arms wrap around her before she can reach the ground, holding her steady.

"I've got you, Clarke."

Lexa's voice is impossibly soft, and she continues to hold her upright with relative ease. Clarke moves to grip the front of the jacket Lexa's wearing tightly with both hands, devolving into sobs before her.

"Don't let me go," Clarke chokes out, balling the jacket so tightly in her hands that her knuckles begin to hurt. "Please don't let go."

The choice is simple. Her people will die so that she can save the one she loves.

"You cannot bring back the dead Clarke, it's not right." Lexa urges.

But she can bring back the dead.

And Lexa doesn't know how it feels, she doesn't know that Clarke's felt empty since she watched the life drain out of Lexa's middle, she doesn't know that Clarke wants to pull her heart out of her chest to make the emptiness real, to make it stop hurting. Lexa doesn't know that Clarke feels like she's had her soul torn apart but was still made to live on.

Or, Clarke has found a way to bring back Lexa but at the price of the lives of her people.

She was never good at making choices with her head and not her heart.

"Maybe this is it."

"What?" Lexa looks at her, smile long and lazy. It causes the corners of Clarke's own mouth to curve, just slightly.

"This." She gestures between them. The bed sheets are soaked and wrinkled. Lexa's skin is lovely and flushed. The air smells thick with them and the starlight is reaching them even through the fogged windows. "Just...these little moments. The world seems more manageable when it's like this."

"You are my world."

Clarke is a troubled Boston PD detective, bearing a big lost and a heavy guilt from the past.

Lexa is a dance teacher by day and a sensual stripper by night, with a tragic and dark past.

The two women meet for the first time on a tragic night where Clarke loses her father, detective Jake Griffin, who dies like a hero saving Lexa's life, when the teenage girl is kidnapped in a house of drug and women dealers.

Eight years later these women will meet again at a very different time in their lives, where the strong attraction at first sight they felt for each other, will lead them to rethink their lives completely.

Through the chaos and insecure state of the world, they found each other. A love born from the dregs of war. The air around them is charged and heavy, like lightening during a storm. Their shadows cross with the flicker of the campfire. The sounds of cheerful banter is but a whisper as their eyes reach into the depths of their souls, searching.

Lexa's eyes flick down to Clarke's lips, just for a second. The movement is noticeable to only one. She bites her lip as Clarke's own turn upward into a smirk, Lexa turns away.

Later, their lips connect, alone and away from prying eyes. Their love as strong and powerful as the people they command. Their hands wander, ridding the other of their clothing. Heda and Wanheda, unify once again.

300 years ago a nuclear war destroyed earth. The only humans alive today are the descendants of those, who were in space when the bombs fell, most coming at the last moment, boarding ships that were planned to leave earth at a later time. The space-stations joined together to form the "Ark". For all they can tell earth won't be inhabitable for humans for another 100 years.

The 300 years in the heightened radiation of space have changed the human race: about a third of the Arks population are born with nonhuman attributes or abilities; These people are frowned upon, but due to there usefulness accepted.

To save resources such as air most crimes are punishable by death. When someone is "floated" it's already gruesome to watch: the air gets evacuated from an airlock, the machines creating the illusion of gravity are switched off, which causes the corpse to float, and lastly the outer door gets opened quickly, which causes the corpse to drift out. Since they can't afford to lose the biomass the body gets salvaged once the spectators are removed from view. Criminals who aren't of age are imprisoned and get their trial as a gift for their 18'th birthday. When mutants use their abilities to commit a crime, or their abilities are considered dangerous, they receive an implant that blocks the effects of the mutation.

Two generations were supposed to be born in space, before we planned to return to the ground.

Freedom.

Is such an imaginary word that ring upon Clarke's ears. There was no such thing as to be free. Freedom is just for the rich, the privileged, and the ones who had the money to afford it. For the one who sits far higher of each pedestal, seated in a mighty chair, head decorated with a crown. And for the likes of her, it is only a fleeting dream, an unattainable distance.

But when those sea-foam green connects with her fading blues, it had lit to that dying ember inside her heart. It opened the shackled gates of her mind, give her hope that indeed there was a way. A way to reach the unobtainable yearns of her heart.

Or is it? Just a trick of the light, that made her imagine of her victorious escape only to be bared of the same teeth that will bleed her to a tragic demise.

It was their four-year anniversary (which aligned with Valentine's Day weekend, coincidentally enough), and they decided to celebrate it with a night full of music and dancing. A luxury that wasn't indulged as often as they'd liked the last few months due to the actresses' renewed busy schedule and the obsessive Hollywood hunting society. Lexa was an a-list small-screen and big budget film star, therefore finding places that they could go without being constantly paraded by the paparazzi was a rare feat, at least in the states, where they called home. Luckily for the werewolf her sister, Anya, had just recently gained ownership of a private club on the outskirts of Santa Monica that had a strict 'Invite Only' policy, and excellently paid security, led by their older cousin Gustus, that could sniff out the paparazzi without fail. It was a fine perk indeed and allowed Lexa and Clarke to just be free to let loose.

But being here, with Clarke so close, is sending her careening so far off-kilter she doesn't even feel like she's standing anymore. Being this close to Clarke now feels like tumbling head over foot down an eternal hill, and she hates it. Hates Clarke, in a way, for being alluring despite smelling like an entire drugstore's worth of scented bath products and perfumes, for being beautiful despite the gray pencil skirt/blazer combination that is so utterly boring it's like she's trying to advertise she's a bureaucrat. Like she's morphed with that terrible material they make cubicle walls out of and she wants the world to know it. But christ, Clarke must be some sort of sick addiction for her because she still wants—craves—with a reckless lack of control that pricks goosebumps into her skin."

Clarke Griffin is an established barrel racer in her rural hometown, and though she has no plans to ever go pro, she's happy with her lot in life. That is until the talented but arrogant Lexa Woods moves to her barn, attracting attention from the local riding community with both her and her horse's pedigree.

Clarke doesn't like her one bit. Thankfully that's not where our story ends.

Part 2 of Tell Me You Love Me

Lexa transfers to Polis University in the middle of the term to be closer to her sister Anya when she's not in the best mental state. There she discovers Anya and her friends (also Lexa's friends by association) have kind of a feud going on with an opposing group known around campus as The Delinquents (which Lexa thinks is just a stupid name if she's honest). In all actuality Lexa really doesn't care about the social situation, preferring to ignore it. But Clarke Griffin, the leader of The Delinquents seems to have taken an interest in her and well... Lexa for some reason can't help but be intrigued by her. They strike up a deal because Lexa has a 102% in class and Clarke wants to do better than a C (or so she says). In return for tutoring Clarke is to help Lexa acquire the proper social skills to obtain a girl she has her eye on (without actually having to reveal who the girl is to Clarke anyway). This deal is meant to be kept secret as is their slow bonding friendship that forms over the course of the term would not go over well with their rivaling friend groups.

Nor would the fact that the girl Lexa's trying to woo is the one teaching her how.

A zombie apocalypse Clexa AU in which Clarke and Lexa meet over the radio. But things don't turn out the way either one of them expected it to. With all the danger and obstacles surrounding them, will they meet again? Or will they die trying?

When a voice cuts through the static of the radio for the first time in months, Clarke almost feels like she's dreaming, is this really happening?

"Hello?" the voice on the radio said again.

Clarke looks at Shaw sitting next to her, a mix of excitement and confusion filling their eyes.

"Say something!" he screams from excitement.

Shit, what was she supposed to say? Without thinking about it she started talking. "Hello from the other side" she sings, making the boy look at her with horror in his eyes.

"I must've called a thousand times" can be heard coming from the radio. The voice of the girl over the radio sounds like music to her ears.

The blonde chuckles before singing back "To tell you I'm sorry for everything that I've done."

Shaw can't help but look at the girl sitting next to him, his face filled with a questionable look. "Are you really going to have a duet with the first person you've talked to in months?" he asks full disbelief.

"And what will happen to you?" Clarke asked, her voice quieting almost to a whisper.

Lexa smiled warmly. "Regardless of what happens, Clarke, I'll be here in the end. Waiting for you."

Clarke has destroyed the CoL as well as the Commander and A.L.I.E. programs. The world waits for an uncertain future as she begins experiencing haunting visions and hallucinations of Lexa. Those around her begin to grow distant and question her mental state. However when Raven discovers that the last remnants of the A.L.I.E. programming have rebooted, Clarke embarks on a journey to follow Lexa's apparitions and save her people from the deadly fate that awaits them.

Set 10 years after Mount Weather events.

Clarke is a mother of nightblood twins.

She has rejected her ties to Skaikru and does not consider them her people anymore.

She live happily with her husband in the Unknown lands far from the reach of the Commander & the Coalition.

Or so she thought because one day a messenger come to her doorstep informing her that the lands they live in now belong to the Coalition and that Heda has ordered the construction of a village around their home.

Now Clarke has a choice to make.

Run away and risk the life of her family by going even further into the Unknown lands.

Or stay and face the Coalition & the rules that will inevitably come with it.

This also means facing her past and the many ghosts thought long gone because she knows that Heda always care for her people and that she will inevitably come visit this village once it is built.

(Swedish, adj.) A cozy, exceptionally pleasant, comfortable or relaxing place or situation.

Think of a warm living room on a cold evening with a fire crackling, flickering candles and a comfortable couch to sink into.

Or perhaps.

That feeling of comfort and ease transferred to what a certain two women might experience when they're together, for reasons they can't begin to explain.
