"Bathed in natural sunlight, the studio felt a lot less clinical, Clarke mused as she placed her mat in the centre of the room, smiling and nodding at the others. Maybe being in the middle was too keen, she was already painfully aware that coming twice in the space of 24 hours was a bit excessive, but she couldn't help it. She was drawn to Lexa like she couldn't explain...and she really wanted to get in shape."

It was completely out of Clarke's control that she had to share a dorm room with one Raven Reyes. The same Raven Reyes that apparently suffered from a mild form of pyromania. It was also completely out of her control that the students on the top floor had nominated her as their de facto leader. It was also completely out of her control that the ground floor hated them.

She is the universe. Who holds the stars in her eyes and gravity in her body, who has memories like meteors that threaten to wipe out all she has created and break her. Who has black holes that she has the power to control but could easily consume her. She is beautiful and deadly, assigning lifeforms to one place. If they try to explore her depths they simple run out of oxygen. Choking and expanding, their bodies cannot handle her so they implode. Forever floating through her conscience, a reminder to not let anyone explore her ever again.

You are the human that got to paint the universe.

Part 2 of Rewriting History

"The legend is of Heda Kom Jus, the first commander of the blood and her life-long love Heda Kom Faete, (commander of fate). It is said that the commander shared her life-force with her lover to bring her back from the brink of death. It caused an unbreakable bond, unknown even to them. Later, when they were separated their souls split to entwine with the other so they would carry each other always. The legend continues to say that Heda Kom Faete refused to accept their reality and in her dying days she transcended time and space disappearing into the void to find her star-crossed lover. Their unwavering love drives the spirit into the afterlife and worlds beyond their time, the two will always find each other. It is the only grounder soulmate story I know of. The first time Lexa Woods met Clarke Griffin, it was on the side of a busy LA road and almost completely by chance.

Up-and-coming actress Lexa is cast opposite established actress Clarke in a new TV show, and things snowball. Lexa was happy to work with Clarke once, but it seems casting directors think they should always come as a package, and so they're cast together again, and again, and again. No one complains.

Clarke's recent broken heart leaves her alone to suffer the summer, avoiding the annual family and friends trip to the ocean so that she can spend time with herself to grow and paint and heal. But when her friend Lexa returns from that annual trip she's honest when she says she's doing well. However, life presents her with a new challenge as the Lexa that returns does not feel the same as the one that left. Something about her is more present in Clarke's damaged heart, and it's weird because she hasn't felt it skip like this in so long and it's for... her friend? Her friend who she's never once looked at like that, not even thought about it. Now she's left to wonder if it's worth the risk to tell her friend what she's feeling or if love is just too hard to keep taking chances on.

All of a sudden, there was a pull in her mind and Lexa was back at the Farmers' Market. She Somewhere in the lands beyond Azgeda a new Empire is turning its gaze towards the Coalition. Its very existence has remained unknown to the Coalition but its ambitions could have drastic effects on the fragile peace that exists within the Coalition - a peace that Lexa has sacrificed almost everything to gain. Even as this new threat begins to manifest forces within the Coalition play their own games, working to wrest power from Lexa's grip and behind it all an unseen hand shapes the fate of people and empires.

With Clarke having gone missing in the North for over a year Lexa is forced to venture out on her own to try and make sense of what has become of Clarke. Journeying into a strange land Lexa will need to pick up Clarke's trail - a trail that has had a year to grow cold - and to complete Clarke's mission to find the AI responsible for the changes that have been wrought upon them all while avoiding the agents of both organic and synthetic powers that

So, no. She does not like this girl. Not as a friend, not as an acquaintance, and definitely, God, definitely not as anything romantic. However, she might be weirdly into Lexa's bed. And her cotton sheets. And soft pillows. The mattress is to die for. She's not to blame for constantly falling in it, really. It's memory foam.

Then Abby understood. "That's your soulmate." She cooed, pulling her daughter into a hug.

"Soulmate?" Wells piped up from beside her.

Abby nodded, setting down again and letting Clarke curl into her lap. Wells hopped up beside them and turned to her expectantly. "You see, every person has someone very special out there in the world. This person is the person you're meant for. They can be your best friend or your spouse or anyone, really. But there's a connection between you and your special person. Every ounce of pain you feel, your special person feels too, and vice versa. It seems Clarke's soulmate is a little clumsy huh?" Abby tried to goad Clarke into laughing. But the little girl was focused very hard, eyebrows scrunched together and pouting adorably. She stared off into the distance, completely still, except for the occasional hiccup.

"I wanna help them." She whispered stubbornly.

The world ended in May when the dead suddenly weren't... dead.

Clarke Griffin, a starving fine art major, was delivering pizzas to make ends meet when she came face to face with death and it's bloodied teeth. The world broke in a week. Screams of terror rang through the air until there was barely a breath left to be made. Each soul was beaten, bruised, and torn apart as they watched their loved ones fall prey to the rise of the dead. The once burning passion of man was stripped from every being, and all that was left was a means of survival.

And somehow, Clarke survives. How? Hell, even she doesn't know.

Costia has always had a crush on Lexa since way back when they first met back in college when Lexa had moved into her dorm room, taking away her single. At first, she had hated the idea of someone else living in her space. She had pulled strings to make sure she didn't have to worry about that. But then she met Lexa and suddenly she couldn't remember a single reason why she had wanted to live alone in the first place.

But Lexa just didn't ever feel the same. She had long given up on the idea that she would, even if her crush never fully went away. Don't get her wrong, she's not pathetic, she moved on of course. But now Lexa is here again, living in her space, single, and... she keeps catching her staring.

It's stirring up things she long buried four years prior when Lexa had fallen in love with someone else and never even batted an eyelash at another person again. She was suddenly so much more present than she ever had been before but she was also a lot more fragile than she had been before. Costia isn't really sure what she's meant to do, but she does know, that if Lexa gives her the chance, she'll always handle her carefully.

Clarke Griffin is the president of the united states and struggling with a recent devastating but necessary political evil. Having bombed a city that resulted in the death of hundreds of people in exchange for the deaths of several terrorist leader, she deals with her guilt clashed with the praise of the government and country in the best way she knows how: alcohol, self-loathing and a lot of sarcasm. She has to stay sound though, and no one helps her do that better than steady and loyal Agent Lexa Woods, head of her personal security detail. Though with those green eyes, measured voice, wonderful body and uniquely kind and warm demeanor, Clarke has to wonder whether Agent Woods actually is helping her stay sound. Some days she certainly doesn't think so. Some day, Clarke can't stand to be around her and those days seem to be growing lately. But when she visits Moscow for an energy policy convention and everything that could possibly go wrong, does, she must try very quickly to set aside her issues, and her desires, and fight for her life.

Clarke thinks taking in a teenager after the most traumatic experience of her life is the most ridiculous thing she's ever heard. She was waiting for the punchline, the drop of the pen that her mother was kidding with her, but when Clarke turned around, there she was met with angry green eyes. After Clarke had lost everything, she didn't think she had it in her to believe this teenager could fix her.

Lexa thought that love was supposed to set her free. That she would feel on top of the world every day after she got married to Costia. Lexa had everything she could ever want, but she had never felt more lost. She didn't think that anything could fix her marriage at this point, not even their five year old son.

Today is Lexa's first day in "grown-up" school and her socks are itchy and her sweater is too warm and her leggings have scottie dogs on them and more than anything she wishes she was reading her Boxcar books alone on her new bed with the purple comforter that still smells like the plastic bag it came in from the store.

Part 7 of Clexa Week 2020

Lexa felt her heart go out to her. Clarke's face was a scattering of dark bruises, blood leaking from a split lip. Her cheeks were swollen red and her eyes, the color of a fading sky, darted around nervously, looking anywhere except Lexa's face.

Tears pooled in Clarke's eyes, tears that she fought to contain but a single one dripped down her cheek. Lexa brushed it away, careful to not pressure any of her bruises. "Oh, you poor, sweet girl," she breathed. "You deserve better than this."

This is a present day AU story of Clarke and Lexa.

I'm Clarke Griffin. I'm twenty years old and am living in Denver, Colorado. I moved here after my father who was a fireman, died in a house collapse. Ever since I was a little girl I've wanted to follow in his foot steps, so that's what I'm going to do.

All seemed to be going normal until I met Lexa Pierce, who happened to be apart of a gang. I never pictured my life taking such an unexpected turn.

What will happen when Clarke's and Lexa's lives cross paths?

Will Clarke be able to be able to trust this green eyed criminal?

Will Lexa be able to get away from her troublesome, dark path?

The wealthy few face uproar, following the discovery of a nefarious slave trade operation that targets youth and enslaves them. As more evidence of the monarchs' numerous crimes is revealed, the wealthy and poor become more divided than before. King, Queens, heirs to the throne and generals are being assassinated. Castles and trade routes are being looted for gold.

Amid the turmoil, the have-nots turn to an extremely powerful Crime Lord that shares her wealth and offers protection from the cruelty of the monarchs. Nicknamed the Queen of Thieves, this mysterious criminal has hundreds of expertly trained spies and Assassins spread across the Thirteen Kingdoms. She is gathering more and more followers with each passing day, making her more powerful than the Thirteen monarchs combined. The only clue to this mysterious Queen of Thieves' identity is the only two words uttered by her spies before they die by their own hand. "Gon Heda."

Queer Street: the moment when a boxer or similar combatant is dazed from getting struck on the head but remains standing.

Or

Lexa is a boxer. Clarke is definitely not.

Part 13 of Ways to Say "I love you"

'I love you' can come in the words 'Sorry I'm late' when arriving home. Doctor Clarke Griffin often finds herself sliding in through the front door calling those words, but Lexa Woods doesn't mind when they spend the evenings tucked into their apartment together.

Lexa and Clarke quickly fall for each other when they become college dorm mates, but Clarke's uncertainty about her sexuality tests their new relationship to its limits.

A college AU with an honorary road trip. Although the 100 TV show doesn't make a big deal out of Clarke's sexuality, I wrote this fic to mirror many members of the LGBT community's first relationship, including my own. I hope you all enjoy. The "M" rating is for chapters further into the work.
