Everything was hazy when Lexa opened her eyes, a fog, a drugged fog, clouded her brain as she tried to push herself to coherency. The first thing she felt was pain. It bit into her wrists and throbbed in her temples. Her vision swam as she swayed harshly from side to side, the floor beneath her pitching and rolling like a ship in a storm.

In progress

In the aftermath of Mount Weather's defeat, Clarke Griffin leaves Bellamy Blake at the gates of Camp Jaha to seek the solace of the forest. She is lost among her own guilt as much as she is lost within the trees around her. She does not expect, however, to meet anyone along her way. When she does, she learns more about the Grounder community and Lexa, though not in the way she would have ever expected. Clarke is seeking forgiveness for the sacrifices she has had to make, but there are sacrifices still to come as she is thrown into a world of chaos, deceit, and revelation. Will she find understanding in the darkness of her trials, or will it consume her forever?

Earth has changed. Nuclear fallout has devastated the only planet known to harbour life. The last of humanity survives in the Ark— a space station that houses the descendants of those lucky enough to be in Earth's orbit when the bombs fell. Their lives are a constant battle between maintaining the Ark's systems and hoping that the Earth will one day become habitable again.

After more than a century time is running out for the Ark and so a small volunteer group is sent to the ground in the hopes of discovering if the Earth can sustain human life.

Lexa is amongst the volunteers sent to the ground. But what she discovers shakes her beliefs to the core and sets her on a path of life and death, love and hate.

She comes to the last apartment on her floor, face trained into an angry scowl and bangs on the door, still holding the white cat that was practically hissing her name. The door opens revealing a brunette, roughly her height, a bag of potato chips in her hands and a raised eyebrow on her beautiful face. "Can I help you?"

Lexa scowls at the brunette, knowing the cat belonged to this apartment, she went to every door and this was the last one. She highly doubts it belongs to anyone on a different floor, considering the door to the stairs are locked and can only be opened with a keycard, and the fact that this was the only other apartment with a doggydoor. Or, in this case, kittydoor.

"Yes, you can." She grits out before practically exploding in the darker girl's face. "Your fucking demon cat has been trying to open a gate to hell in my house and I will not have it. You had better lock this demon up or I will not hesitate to call animal control on you."

"There's so many people out there..." she mused, leaning forward slightly.

Warm, tanned arms wrapped around her waist. "Its a monumental occasion for them. And for us," Aliyah purred, nipping her neck, "This is the first life where we will be formally joined."

Chaya sighed contentedly. "I know. I couldn't be happier, really." She turned and faced the other woman, feeling her heart beat faster as she looked in Aliyah's green eyes. Her stomach did a flip, but she had something to say before the ceremony took place. "But I'm afraid this life will end like all the others," she whispered.

Aliyah frowned. "I hope not. I have killed you and seen you die enough already," she said, brushing her hands through the blonde's fine hair.

Alexandria Woods was a guarded and reserved girl who channeled her thoughts into her writing. Careful and cynical with every stranger she met, until she met a girl. The girl opened her up, knocked her walls down and exposed her like never before. She almost fell in love, that is until the girl left. She moved away and Lexa is alone again, guarded and reserved as she was before.

Clarke Griffin was a bold and dauntless girl who put her emotions into her paintings. Care-free and trusting with every one she meets, falling in love with strangers, until she met a girl. The girl made her want to settle down, "tamed" the fire within her. She fell deeply in love, that is until she had to go. Clarke left and Lexa stayed until they crossed path again, as strangers. Blue meets green and everything gets blurred.

Clarke had done it all; drugs, excessive drinking and some self harm. She did everything that could shut the world down and keep her mind blank. It's her second time out of the recovery center and her mother is determined to keep her sober. To do so, Abby hired a sober companion to stay with her daughter and, hopefully, get her to stay clean and make something out of her life.

Lexa is in the field of helping addicts for a while and she's good, only this new client is going to challenge her on levels she couldn't imagine.

The road to sobriety never ends; it gets easier, but only if you consistently work on it. Hiding issues won't make them disappear; you must face and deal with your demons. But what if a person doesn't want to do anything to help themselves? Or maybe they simply need the right person by their side, not allowing them to fall.

When a presenting Alpha bleeds blue instead of the usual red, it is a sign of future danger. Many years ago, the mixing of wolf and human DNA produced four dynamics. The first dynamic, the Sentinels, are incredibly rare and only present when a disastrous threat is near. In space, aboard the Ark, a young woman questions the reasons of why all dynamics are heavily medicated with suppressants. She yearns to smell the dirt of the ground, eat food that isn't chemically treated and to do anything she can to protect her friends.

On Earth, the Mountain Men are becoming an even larger issue. Their kidnappings of Grounders keep increasing.

A dark-hearted queen of ice will do anything she can to make the public question the first Omega-born Commander.

This space-born woman and the first Omega-born Commander will have to battle several obstacles before they can achieve true world peace.

I read a work a while ago where Lexa and Clarke grew up together on Earth. Lexa became Heda and Clarke became her wife. They loved each other so much, but Clarke died. Lexa was eventually married to Costia but it was political not love. Then a young girl that looked exactly the same appeared with the same name. Lexa met her and struggled every time she saw the girl. This is just something I thought of that works well with this back story. Lexa invites her to Polis and this is their story as they try to figure it out.

Sent to the esteemed boarding school of the area for her senior year, Clarke finds herself roommates with two members of the school Volleyball team, Raven and Octavia, who convince her to join. Earning her place on the team isn't easy, especially considering that she and the team captain Lexa Woods, known around campus as 'The Commander', seem to get off on the wrong foot. Struggling to prove herself to Lexa and settle into her new environment, Clarke soon begins to resent her captain as she feels pressured to try so hard. When Clarke finds out the hard as commander isn't as rock solid as she is believed to be, everything just gets even more confusing for her.

Yvoire is rather beautiful, I thought while entering the garden of five senses. The flowery, green scenery feeding my vision with vivid colors and outstanding sights. Touching the foliage felt like touching air, so soft it almost felt intangible, and so fresh it almost felt surreal. The ensembles of birds saluted us with high-pitched melodies my ears welcomed with eager desire. And the smell, the smell cleaned my soul, it was so pure, so uplifting.

"Beautiful." Lexa whispered. Her voice traveling like molecules to my ears. I turned to my right and looked at her. She was marveled, all her senses, as well as mine, seemed to be lost in the landscape. For a split second, I found myself watching her, enthralled by the uncommon beauty, the sights surrounding us forgotten. Her eyes, marvelous celestial green orbiting around. Her cleft chin, her strong jawline, her crimson lips were so marvelously symmetrical and full, a strong electric current daring the tips of my fingers to softly touch and trace. Yes, I thought, beautiful.

It was a hard truth, but not an impossible realization.

I reveled at the pleasing sight of my beautiful best-friend.

"No. But you didn't answer my question." Clarke lowers her hands, and takes Lexa's. Lexa's palm burns beneath her touch, and Clarke runs her thumb across it. The contrast between her cold tone of voice and warmth of the gesture must be bewildering, to Lexa. Clarke doesn't care.

"Which question is that?" Lexa asks, audibly swallowing. She allows Clarke to play with her hand, because of course she does. But slowly, she tries to draw away, and Clarke tightens her grip.

"What about me is worth protecting?"

As is her custom, Clarke interrupts Lexa's daily upside-down handstand pushup regime by barging into her room uninvited. Suffice to say, she doesn't just turn back around and let Lexa be.

She turns round to face her, breath hot against Lexa's lips, breaking the invisible barrier of cloth and skin. "Why did you... you know, end things?"

The bartender set Clarke's fresh glass of whiskey down in front of her.

"Are you waiting for someone?" Clarke asked.

The question brought a small smile to the brunette's face. "No. My plans were to come in, have a drink, and then go home. But I wouldn't mind some company if you're offering."

"I'm Clarke," the blonde held out her hand towards the brunette.

The brunette's smile grew as she took the blonde's hand in a firm shake. "Lexa." She snatched up her glass of scotch and finished off the rest of the drink. After tossing a couple of bills onto the counter, Lexa stood. "Let's go somewhere more private."

Everything goes as planned until a fateful roadside bombing leaves the two sisters separated. After Lexa and half of their crew are presumed as K.I.A., Anya is honourably discharged and sent back home to New York where Clarke receives the shocking news of her lover's untimely death. Anya comforts her younger sister's wife and children in attempts to honour her promise to Lexa. Only, as the years pass, her 'comfort' unforeseeably becomes something more to the both of them.

Then -- by some miraculous twist of fate -- Lexa shows up five years later, changing everything.

No one can ever forget that there are two sides to every family.

Lexa prefers contract killer. Brutally precise and efficient. Blood for money—no other attachments.

Clarke prefers hitwoman. More force, more room for improvisation.

Neither of them prefer crossing paths with each other. In fact, they openly loathe it: crossing paths usually results in threats, violence, gunfire, the occasional chase and at least one instance of bondage.

But when Clarke and Lexa are hired by different clients to kill the same target, their paths won't only cross, but converge. Explosively.

Clarke is a young goddess charged with the care and tending of Spring. She knows nothing of death or pain or suffering until her dearest friend's lover is taken to the Underworld. Determined to get him back and see her friend smile again, Clarke journeys into Hades, where she soon learns that the stories she's been told about the dreaded "Lord" of the Underworld are false, and that death is as much a part of life as love.

A queering of the Greek myth of Persephone and Hades, with no abduction, rape, or coercion. Inspired by The Dark Wife by Sarah Diemer.

"You loved her?"

Niylah waited quietly as Clarke contemplated her answer, careful to measure her words so that they wouldn't hurt her. They would never be designed to hurt, but it was also still too raw to gloss over or deny, even two years on.

"I did."

The longing was still there, bubbling underneath the surface.

"Did? You don't anymore?"

Clarke still found it difficult to talk about, especially with Niylah, the one person who had shown her more than just a sliver of happiness since... she left. Clarke couldn't lie to her either, she had too much respect for her and would rather lose her than lie just to keep her.

But how the hell could she describe how she felt about it all? How to admit that her emotions were still woven so intimately within and around another person? A person who not only broke her heart into a thousand pieces, but whose memory was still like shards in her gut. She had no choice but to be completely honest, so utterly drained was she with the weight of being everything but honest with herself.

"It's kind of like liquid. It changes form. It used to be free and flowing and wild and when she left, I don't know, it just kind of... froze. I froze."

"Where's Clarke?" She shrugs off her jacket as she slides into the booth next to Lexa, takes a swipe at her fries.

Lexa glares, "Bathroom,"

"Did you order already?" Her words are muffled, mouth stuffed with fries. Lexa's fries. "You got my text, right? Cheeseburger special?"

"Yes."

"No onions?"

"Yes."

"Still in love with Clarke?"

"Ye-" Lexa chokes, coughing up air as she's left spluttering like a fool. She turns to Raven, glare rightfully in place and she isn't sure if she's about to murder the brunette or-

"Gotcha," she waggles her eyebrows, smirk plastered on as she swipes another fry.

Lexa was no saint as the head of her vampire clan, though her arch nemesis was worse and it was Azgeda whom started the apocalypse in the first place.

When Clarke and Lexa meet, neither one of them dared to dream of the tangible bond they shared. But Clarke despised vampires because they took her life from her, they took everything she loved and crushed it. Vampires had no heart. The one they did have was cold and didn't beat. They had backstage passes for after the concert ended but Raven and Octavia didn't want to wait.

"Raven, we can't be back here," Clarke said, trying to stop them from walking backstage. Surprisingly there wasn't a lot of security so they got back easily. The two walked through the halls, Clarke looking behind them, making sure no one was following.

"Hey guys," Raven whispered, making her turn around. "Their changing room." Clarke tried to stop her as she creaked open the door. The two of them looked through the crack their jaws dropped.

Drummer, Lexa Woods, had her mouth to a person's neck and two strands of blood dripped down their neck. Her eyes were slits, almost black and when she pulled away, she had sharp fangs drenched in blood. The girls tried to back up but Raven tripped over Clarke and they fell into the room. Everyone has a soulmate. Everyone can identify their soulmate by the black, ink-like stain that marks their skin where they first make physical contact with their soulmate. Everyone except Lexa Woods.

But that isn't stopping the bold, determined Dr. Clarke Griffin from taking an interest.

Clarke receives a letter, along with a personal diary from her beloved maternal grandmother after she passes away. In the letter, Clarke's grandmother reveals a wonderful love story that she experienced in Paris, back in 1954, with a woman named Alexandrine Lesbois.

Her grandma asks Clarke to help her fulfill her final wish, to find the lover she never forgot, and to give Alexandrine, if she still lives, a letter meant only for her, and also the urn containing her lover's ashes. And if the woman no longer lives, she wish to be resting, alongside her soulmate, the one she loved so much in secret, all her life.

Clarke, while trying to fulfill her grandma's last wish in Paris, the city of love and lights, she'll find someone who will completely change her life forever.

Abby continues, "when Lexa isn't in school, she works as a contractor," and Abby lifts her hands, "I have to concede defeat. This project is out of my depth and with my hours, and you and Jake living here now, this house needs be a home. She'll be here this summer finishing up the work," she says and Clarke's eyes flutter shut. She tries not to let her imagination run wild but she fails - horribly. Few people enjoy the isolation of deep space and wish to return to a posting within the Alpha quadrant. Being the first Starfleet station deep in the Gamma Quadrant means that supplies are limited, visitors are few, and contact with the rest of the Federation is minimal. In New York city where everything is possible, where anything will go, lives will be changed, fates derailed, time will stop, but at the exact same time, it will fly by. It's the city full of hopes and dreams for lots, but somehow, paths of several people will intertwine in this small but prestige gallery in Brooklyn, making them re-think life, love, friendships, willing them to change, for better.

Lexa Woods is a curator in a gallery, driven, optimistic, carrying and passionate. About everything. That makes her a fierce business woman, but also a cute dork.

Clarke Griffin is a thriving artist, trying to make her art known and loved, not for the money or fame, but for the love and empathy.

Clarke and Madi had been given a precious gift that nobody else on the Earth could say they've had: almost six full years of peace. When the Prison Transport ship landed in Shallow Valley, Clarke knew their lives would change, but nothing could have prepared her for the drastic twists and turns fate took when it ripped her from her life and threw her into another; an unfamiliar world riddled with familiar ghosts and a world of problems Clarke didn't know existed. Clarke must navigate unfamiliar terrain and fill unfamiliar shoes in order to get back to protect the young life that saved her own.

In which, through a freak cosmic accident, Clarke Griffin finds herself thrust in a world that's vastly different from her own. A world that challenges her perceptions of what the existing world should be and offers a different view of what the world can be like. It is also a world that offers her a glimpse of what could have been had things not happened the way they did years before. But even as this world is better than the one she lives in, she will have to make hard choices about what she wants in her life.

At this moment, Lexa only knows the searing pain in her stomach and Clarke crying before Lexa whispers her final words. "You were right Clarke, life is about more than just surviving." With those words finally uttered, Lexa closed her eyes as if she were about to fall asleep and when she felt the abyss take her to her new home, or that is what she expected at least. Instead, a white flash appeared and then she felt like she was searing through the edges of the universe, stars being born and a few seconds after they died. What was seconds to her were millions of years, if not billions until she stopped moving and a dark but caring voice that she didn't recognize, roared through her mind.

"Her people have killed hundreds of us, Clarke"

"What about the thousands of their kind we've killed? How many thousands more will have to die before you can accept that I love her."

Clarke Griffin is a fisherwoman on the island of Darkmoor. Every morning she goes out at daybreak to feed her village at the risk of being eaten alive by the shoal of mermaids that cave off the coastline.

One day there is a terrible attack that drives Clarke's ship to shore, drowning most of her crew. Walking on the beach she comes across a mermaid, injured and stranded in a rockpool. Clarke tries to kill the strange and haunting creature but something stalls her hand.

Lexa defies everything Clarke ever thought she knew about her kind, but she soon finds there is a price for mercy. Clarke will have to sacrifice her her heart in order to save her home.

Clarke snorted at the question, "Lincoln has been perfect. Lexa, however, tried to kill me." Anya's head snapped to look directly at Lexa on the sofa, who had not once looked up from her magazine to acknowledge her sister's presence.

"She tried jumping in front of me to get on the train. It was completely justified," murmured Lexa as though she was bored with the conversation.

"So, you tried to kill her?" Anya exclaimed.

"No, I nudged her, and she nearly fell off the train," Lexa explained like it was obvious then raised her eyes to settle on Anya's face, "it was hardly attempted murder." Anya rolled her eyes, then turned her attention back to the blonde.

After Lexa's betrayal and the fall of the Mountain, Clarke went into hiding. She found peace and security with Niyah, a woman who saw her as more than a political weapon. For five years, Clarke had found happiness with her wife and children. But all good things end.

Niylah's murdered right in front of her. Clarke and her children are saved by Lexa's people. She is kept under the Commander's protection and has to learn about everything that had changed over the past five years. The war calls on her, but will she become a leader again? Will she let Lexa back in and trust her? And will she get vengeance for her wife's murder?

Clarke is not having a good week. After a last-ditch effort to save her crumbling relationship only to find out he'd been cheating on her for some time, she finds herself stranded in a strange city when a powerful hurricane grounds all flights. Soaking wet from rain and with no rooms available at any hotel, she's on the verge of a breakdown when a complete stranger comes to her rescue.

Lexa has been in this situation before--stuck in the city when a bad storm cancels her flight. It's not her first rodeo, and she's more than prepared to ride out the storm alone in her hotel room. But when she overhears the distress in the blonde's voice, she finds herself offering to share her room with a complete stranger.

They're a little tipsy and Lexa is blushing furiously, but Clarke's hands are wound in her hair and she's using her forearms on her shoulders to guide her back against the wall. There's a quiet thump as her back presses sharply against the wooden frame and Lexa thinks she can hear cheers and laughter from the other side of the door, but the embarrassment leaves as quickly as it comes when Clarke presses her lips to Lexa's and—oh.

Lexa can't breathe, can't think, can't remember her own name, because stars are blinking in her head and her heart is thrumming in her chest and her stomach is turning and this girl's lips are so soft against hers. Maybe she isn't quite as sober as she thinks, or maybe this girl is simply an exceptional kisser. Either way, the only thing that Lexa can dimly comprehend is that these seven minutes might actually pass by too fast.

All her life Lexa has dreamed of past lives, and of being hunted by monsters masquerading as people. "They're only dreams," her parents have always said, "Demons aren't real."

When Titus dies and Lexa is reunited with her Marine veteran brother, Lincoln, the three of them try to start over in Lincoln's adoptive home town of Terminus, Montana. Then a chance encounter with three drifters, a supernatural vigilante, and the school pariah turns Lexa's world upside down. She isn't entirely human and she isn't alone. The demons are real. They'll come back. If she isn't ready, they'll kill her, just as they have in other lives. If she runs others will suffer. With no easy choices and only past failures to guide her, Lexa chooses allies and preps for a confrontation, but the demons have bigger plans.

"Oh and Miss. Woods," The receptionist began. "Please keep mind your interview will be held on the second floor-the establishment below is in no way affiliated with Bedford Accounting,"

I kept replaying what the woman on the phone had said as I made my way to the address that had been emailed to me. What could it possibly be on the first floor that she had been so insistent wasn't anything to do with her firm?

I let out a long nervous breathe, slowing my car to a stop and shutting off the engine. I took a glance at myself in the rear view mirror, smoothing down my black skirt and white blouse.

"You've got this Lexa, you've got this. The job is practically yours," I told myself, stepping out of the car and looking over at the address I had been given by the accounting firm.

I felt my brow furrow as I saw a purple neon sign brandishing the name 'Teasers'. Now I knew why; it was a fucking strip joint.
