Part 2 of Ameliorate

Lexa and Clarke have been together for roughly two and a half years now. Clarke's art is becoming a bigger asset and Lexa is nearly halfway through her undergrad years to become a psychologist. Things have been all good between them, but suddenly their pasts are bubbling up even as the future soars down at them. They must learn how to combat the struggles of their past coming back to them, while simultaneously trying to decide on whether or not to take a major step into the future. Relationships will strain and tears will be shed. The question is, will they ultimately recover from everything that comes at them?

23/07/2018

Last update: 11/01/2019

Lexa is the adopted daughter of crime lord, Gustus. She was brought to him for stealing from him, but upon seeing her, he took her in as his own. His daughter, Anya, quickly bonded with her and became a mentor for her. Lexa does not speak about her life before Gustus took her in. Flash forward some years and Lexa is now the kingpin herself. Cold, calculating, and ruthless. She does what she has to in order to ensure the survival of her people. That is until she meets Clarke, who makes her see that maybe there is more to life than just surviving. Can she give up her life of crime? Or is it too late and she is in too deep?

Clarke is the top pre-med student her school has seen in decades with a passion for the arts. She went into med school to follow in her mother's footsteps, choosing the safe path with a promising future. Until she meets Lexa who shows her that life is more fun with risks because "what is life, if you're not doing what you love?"

The AU where Clarke and Lexa are from opposite worlds, until they meet and their worlds collide.

Graduation is just around the corner for childhood best friends, Clarke and Lexa. The sweet haze of summer has already begun to set in, but the girls find themselves in an awkward place. Both of them are still virgins and soon they'll be off to college. Not wanting to be unprepared, the two of them decide to experiment with each other for practice. But, as any friends-with-benefits deal usually goes, their emotions catch up and soon, the once-playful relationship turns serious. Their friendship starts to teeter on a precarious edge, feelings run amuck, best-laid plans soon get burned up, and somewhere in the middle, they find themselves inevitably falling in love.

The only question is, can they figure it out before it's too late?

Clarke and Lexa are childhood best friends who've grown into a world of fame. Lexa a musician, and Clarke a very popular you-tube painter with aspirations to own her own art gallery. Their entire relationship is fully impacted by the media and Lexa's more than demanding career, setting up expectations and difficult realities between the both of them.

With every step they take being scrutinized and criticized by the entire world that watches them, it makes the natural progression of their relationship a lot more difficult, especially when things start to romantically evolve between them. Is their close friendship and deep love enough to survive the brutal world of flashing lights?

Rain pours down on all sides around me. It's like a fog that I can't see through. Even though I'm basically blind, I keep walking into what ever lies ahead of me. Everyone else knows their destiny, while on the other hand, I don't. I don't even have a clue. All my friend's destiny is to go on great adventures and live it up. While other people's is to just work the rest of their lives. Everyone finds out there destiny at age fourteen, apparently that's the age where you can take on the burden of your destiny. I'm fourteen and a half, four months away from turning fifteen. So why haven't I found out my destiny yet? Because "I'm special", at least that's what the Council says. They're keeping something from me, they just don't know that I'm on to them.

The world is divided into two different classes: the Council and everyone else. The Council is multiple people who are fit to rule our world together. There are at least 12 members of the Council. The difference between the Council and everyone else, is that the Council tells people what to do, and we have to do it. The only way to get into the Council is for it to be your destiny. And the Council chooses your destiny. At least that's what I think, everyone else says that our destiny is not chosen by the Council, it's just chosen. Let's just say that no one knows for sure.

We don't have families, we are born from our Mothership, she is our mother. Mothership is a breeding station, where everyone is born. Except for the Council members, they were the first of our kind. When we are born we go straight into our chosen houses. We stay in these houses until we find our destiny. So I'm still stuck in my house, while my friends are going on their adventures. I've been here the longest, almost longer than our house leader. When you get placed into a house you better make some friends, cause you're gonna be there awhile.

Lexa knew from the beginning that she had strong feelings for Clarke. Hell, when they first met, Lexa was a blabbering fool. Clarke made her feel something that she'd been trying to run away from. So when Clarke asked her to go on a road trip, Lexa was more than thrilled. However, what happens when their trip takes a turn for the worse? This AU follows the aftermath of what happens when things go down hill.

In this universe, there are werewolves. People who can turn into wolves, but are not forced to do so. It is as much a part of them as is the human.

In this universe, the ark is on the ground. However, there is no alliance between Skaikru and the other clans, barley a truce. They have their own piece of land, hardly large enough to sustain them, which they must not leave. For if they do, they are to be killed.

And for this reason, the Skaikru must contain the wolf within them, while the Grounders run free in the woods. This has been the way for the past fifty years. This, is about to change.

Clarke becomes a little bit more like Lexa before Lexa becomes a little bit more like Clarke. Clarke must hate Lexa and she wishes to kill her for what she'd done, but it becomes a difficult task as she gets involved with the commander once more. Clarke's actions might have consequences directly affecting her people and the commander of course is in primarily for the interest of her own people. Clarke's gonna have to lead, fight and kill to survive again. Will she always have to do it by herself? Or maybe the mighty commander will need or want Wanheda by her side? In the past, Clarke and Lexa fought grounders and Mount Weather people. That's what they know, but when they find this new enemy they won't be able to fight alone and survive.

It's been five years since Lexa has stepped foot back in her hometown, back in Washington state even. She's only back for one reason, only one reason and that's for Octavia and Lincoln's wedding. Lexa is the youngest of Anya and Lincoln. Being so small, she was the one to always get picked on by her older siblings. If by choice the brunette wouldn't even be here, she wouldn't be back at all. She can't miss her brother and Octavia's wedding so here she is...back in her hometown, back where the pain is still heavy in the air. Five years ago, Lexa left, to never come back, but here she is for a good couple of weeks. Enough time to visit with her family and go to the wedding and leave. She knew it would be hard to return, but she has no one else to blame but herself. Lexa lives with regret, she's tried to go on with her life, and for the most part she does, because when she's away from this place it's easy to forget. It's easy to pretend everything is okay, but she's back so now it's harder to forget. It's hard to not think about the choice she made five years ago.

At 24 years old, Lexa Woods has already developed a reputation as the top homicide detective in New York. When two men from Ark Laboratories are found dead, her life becomes a whirlwind as she desperately tries to find answers while struggling to keep her own feelings in check.

Clarke Griffin is 26 years old and not at all where she wants to be. Unhappy with her job and having learned that her (ex)boyfriend is a sleaze, she feels like she needs to make a change. She needs to release whatever's building up inside of her.

The lives of Lexa Woods and Clarke Griffin intersect in the aftermath of a bloody crime. Sparks fly as they each find something special in the other. But there's a killer on the loose, and no one knows who they are or what they want. If Lexa doesn't figure it out, Clarke might just be the next target.

Part 5 of Clexa pride week 2020

When Clarke was younger, she used to read a book that had one of her favorites quotes: 'The dead are gone. The living are hungry.' She always thought it was a powerful quote even if she couldn't truly understand the meaning. Now she can understand it, however, it had lost all the meaning. In the new word, the dead are hungry and the living are gone.

And she was alone.

Well, maybe that wasn't completely accurate.

"I think I just need a moment alone," Clarke said, and the mourner soon nodded in understanding, offered a pitiful smile and stepped away. Clarke clenched her fists behind her back.

"Of course, you take all the time you need, dear."

Clarke just shot her a watery smile back and waited until she was left alone with the coffin of her dead wife. She stood there, in the cold, candlelit hall, eyes stuck on the doors as all the mourners filed out.

The second the door shut and she was alone Clarke threw her head back with a relieved sigh. "Oh thank the fucking gods," she breathed, and promptly gave a rough kick to the coffin in front of her. "Are you done playing your death?"

The coffin moved.

Lady Clarke of House Tully was sent to ward with the Tyrells of Highgarden at the mere age of twelve, following her father's execution for high treason. Nearly a decade later, she still lives in the Reach, a perpetual guest of Lady Raven Sand, the child of Lord Tyrell's youngest daughter and Prince Sinclair Martell, third in line to the Dornish crown. The two things they share in common is a burning hatred of the Targaryen monarchs who stole their loved ones from them, and a talent for manipulation and ladder-climbing.

Meanwhile, Lord Lexa Stark faces rebellion against her hold on the North, and must hold her allies close if she wishes to see another winter. There is only so much a direwolf protector can do to hold back her enemies, especially when a greater conspiracy is brewing in the southernmost parts of Westeros.

After just finding out her room-mates are playing in a local band at a nearby stage-bar 'The Capital' she feels she might have just found exactly what she needs. Clarke finds herself in a tight spot as her feelings for Lexa, the lead vocalist of the band, start to unravel. Seeing that Lexa can't deal with the pressure from her one true love's, passing, they try to hide their emotions for each other. However, as fate brings them together their efforts to mask what draws them to one another become futile. Neither one can fathom the courage to speak their mind and so they use what they can to tell each other how they feel. They use music.

Queen Nia gave Klark very specific duties to perform as the Ice Nation's ambassador in Polis.

Namely, to kill the Commander.

Klark decided to take a different path

Leksa had every intention of killing the new Azgeda ambassador, as she had the two before her.

Klark was special enough to change the way Leksa thought of the Ice Nation.

The Commander was going to complete the Coalition of the Twelve Clans, even if it killed her, and the stars fell from the skies.

The first time Lexa hears about soulmates, she's eight and reading a torn up book at her latest foster home. It's her sixth one so far, and while it's not terrible, no one is ever around. Luckily, Lexa is used to being alone, so she finds things to entertain herself.

It's how she ended up reading this old book about soulmates. About how, upon finding your soulmate, the world will explode in colour.

Lexa has never seen colour. And this explanation, this concept of soulmates, gives her hope. She wants to see colour so much. She wants to find the person who will help her see it, who will love her, and never leave.

Or,

Lexa Woods is a millionaire playgirl and the sole inheritor to the Woods Enterprise Holdings fortune after her parents passed away in a tragic accident. Since then, she's completely satisfied living a life involving endless booze, women, and parties. Although she is still a senior (and has been for 2 years now) at the prestigious UCLA, college education and real-life responsibilities doesn't concern her. She's envied, wanted, and rich, and that's all that matters.

That all changes however, once she meets the beautiful and mysterious Clarke Griffin – a dedicated student struggling to support herself and her younger brother, who isn't at all intrigued by Lexa's self-destructive lifestyle. Although both women are from two very different worlds, Lexa is determined to get to know more about the only girl who, up until now, has been the only one able to make her feel alive. She wants – No, NEEDS – to find a way to make Clarke see that there is more to her than meets the eye... that there is more hidden away to the girl behind the mask.

Clarke Griffin's Magazine Arkadia is her life, and she puts all her soul into her work. She understands her privilege, inheriting such a large amount of money young gave her the opportunity to be the kind of journalist she wanted to be, she couldn't blow it.

Lexa Woods understands privilege too, she sees it wherever she goes, written on the smiling faces of happy families. Most people think privilege is about wealth, power, or opportunity, I guess it is all that too. However when you have grown up with nothing and nobody, when you have had to fight for the very right to live and walk free then you realise that privilege is even more simple than that. It is a privilege to have trust, to believe in someone. Lexa is not privileged.

Lexa might not be privileged, but she is super smart, and really strong, and she knows it. She doesn't need to rely upon anyone else, because she has herself, and that is all that she needs.

She boots up her 17" Alienware Laptop, and started her personal encryption software Trikru 3.2, clicking her knuckles ominously her fingers began gliding effortlessly across the keyboard, nobody was safe from her in her domain.

"Right Miss Griffin, let's see what you are hiding."

Tonight is date night and Clarke's got a hot date with...Clarke trails her freshly manicured nails down the thin sheet of paper...Alexandria Woods.

It's always a surprise the first time Clarke meets with her clients. Usually the photos depict quite adequately the person that is seated in front of her, but sometimes pictures aren't enough. Usually they don't capture the emotions behind their eyes, the nervousness, shame, desire, or lust. Or the subtle physical behaviours, subconsciously brought on by her presence, the hesitation, doubt, excitement, or impatience. In this case, Alexandria photos had failed to capture the sheer beauty of the woman dressed smartly in a three piece, perfectly hand tailored, probably brand named charcoal black suit. It's elegant, the way it clings to all the right places, even though Lexa is lean she clearly has the body of a woman. She has class also; judging by that expensive, yet subtle watch peeking out from behind her jacket sleeve and those black, leather Jimmy Choo's. From the moment Clarke meets Lexa she knows, Lexa isn't going to be good for business.

start instigative discussions about politics, sexuality and/or religion propose to you in front of everyone pretend to be really drunk as the evening goes on (sorry, I don't drink but I have first hand experience of rowdy drunks due to my job)

Part 1 of Not A Hero, Never Was

Everyone in Polis knows the mysterious and beautiful Clarke Griffin, Polis' proudest daughter, sole heir to the multi-billion Griffin Enterprise and a renowned artist. What they don't know, however, is her new night job. Enter Lexa Woods, a determined police commander who's only ever wanted to avenge her parents and build a life together with her fiancée. The two of them together may just be what finally takes down Nia of the Azgeda, Polis' most notorious crime boss. But victory comes at a cost that may be too great for them to bear.

Clarke and the rest of the delinquents run a con: they get people to fall in love with Clarke, marry her and steal all of their money. They're imposters and they're good at it.

But then Clarke meets her next mark, a woman named Lexa who is as closed off as Clarke herself. When Clarke finds herself falling for her latest target, will they be able to trust each other despite the lies? Will they learn that maybe, just maybe, life can be about more than just surviving?

After the massacre of the peacekeepers, the Sky people are brought to Polis to face justice. Given the gravity of the crime against the Coalition, the clans demand more than just the execution of Pike's group. They demand retribution and give them 2 choices:

- The death of 300 Sky people in payment for the 300 lives slain, or;
- Abby and Sky leaders are put to death as atonement.

Unless there is a third choice? A rare tradition, seldom invoked, could be their salvation. If Clarke and Lexa accept.

Alt universe

Some things to know:

- Despite what the name suggests, there aren't only 100 humans left. I just combined the names of The Last of Us and The 100 since they're the main stories being used.
- This story includes elements from The Girl With All The Gifts (2016); this movie is on Netflix if you want to watch it.
- This story is set in 2049, which is 10 years after The 100 were sent to the ground in the original story, and 10 years after the ending of The Last of Us 2.
- There aren't many connections to the original storyline of The 100 except for relationships between characters because this is an alt universe. Some groups are still included in the story, like the grounders and Wonkru.
- Some characters who have died as of Season 6 of The 100 are still alive, others aren't.
- This is mainly focusing on the world of The Last of Us, but because it's years later, and the fact that The Last of Us 2 didn't focus on many characters who lived past the ending of the game, characters of The Last of Us universe may not be mentioned for a while.

Since the beginning, there had been five families throughout history that had controlled the world. They are known as the Elite. They were the Griffin, Jaha, Kane, Wallace and Woods families.

Once they had found out that the world was dying, they decided to rid the world of most of the population. This did sit well with the Griffin and Woods families, so they left and started a revolution against the Elite.

Years later, there are only two remaining members of each of those two families. Lexa Woods and Clarke Griffin.

Clarke thinks that the Elite destroyed the Rebel forces and killed Lexa along with it. She is being held by the Elite and as part of the punishment for the family betrayal, she is being forced to marry one of the remaining members of the Elite to rid the Griffin name once and for all.

What happens when her world gets turned upside down yet again and she finds out the Rebels are still out there, and their leader is none other than the one and only Lexa Woods. Her childhood best friend turned love of her life.

Klark Kom Trikru and Leksa Kom Trikru are best friends. We're best friends. They did everything together and there was never a time they were apart. Until one day when celebrating Leksa's 6th birthday in her village, the Ice Nation attacked. Dozen's of people were killed and dozens more taken hostage, Klark include.

15 years later, Klark is presumed dead, and Leksa has buried her past and heart. She is now Leksa Kom Trikru the ruthless Heda, commander of the 12 clans. She has been ruling for 5 years with only one remaining enemy, the infamous Azgedian Wanheda, the commander of death.

Little does Leksa know, Wanheda herself has been sent by Queen Nia to infiltrate and assassinate the Commander of the 12 clans.

Leksa can't help but feel a certain familiarity for the "traveller" which was picked up and brought before her by her scouts. Klark was tortured and beaten to the point where she has lost the life she used to live. Her sole mission now is to serve her Queen and kill the commander.

Is Leksa safe in the walls of her tower? Will Klark remember her best friend? Can they reunite lost feelings? Or has all hope been lost?

The dead lay burned and grotesque, exposed before the Mountain. Melted alive by the pull of a lever, by fire they could neither see, nor hear, nor touch. Rain falls heavy, cold. Delivers a sting to those that move below. Lexa leads a group of her warriors to the forest's edge, sees a small band of the Skaikru at the opposite end. One steps to meet her in the open glade, his steps tentative as he emerges from the safety of the trees, eyes fixed on the dozens of corpses between them. The purpose of their meeting looms thick, draws deep lines into wan faces. They most broker a peace over blood-soaked soil, find a way to move forward amongst the bones of their enemies. The Commander decided she would attend this meeting to signal the importance of this juncture, her sincere will to end the fighting, the breaking of bodies and spirits. Senseless. But she also has another purpose, one that will come later. One that weighs heavier.

Financially strapped aerospace VP Lorelei Tsing asks Lexa Woods, a former insurance investigator who once specialized in recovering stolen goods worth millions, to lead a team of expert thieves (Raven Reyes and Octavia and Bellamy Blake) as they recover stolen airplane designs from a rival company. But there's a twist: the designs were never the VP's to begin with, and she's cheated them all. Now, the honest woman she hired must convince the band of criminals to do the right thing and steal the plans back with the help of a gifted grifter named Clarke Griffin. What the team doesn't expect is that they will develop a taste for doing good, and one job may not be enough.

Lexa was rushing down the hall but glanced back to see Clarke trying to keep up. She smirked and turned to walk backwards. "You don't start until tomorrow," she said, pointing a finger at the blonde.

Clarke had the urge to snap it off Lexa's hand. She put her hands on her hips, standing still now. "You're so annoying, Lexa," she said.

The woman turned back around to avoid running into someone. She called over her shoulder, "That's Dr. Woods to you, boss."

And then you got scared, and pulled away, reducing our interactions to only some of you, only the easy parts of you... and maybe you saw that look in my eye, or felt the race of my heart when you fell asleep on my chest... causing you once again to retreat, leaving me with none of you."

"I know... I'm not him... I know I'll never be him... but I'm still a person with needs and wants and a beating fucking heart... A heart that wants you... I just wish that were enough.

More than anything else, I wish I could go back to the night we met..."

She isn't sure what's happening, and doesn't have time to debate the options before Lexa is stepping towards her and changes the tone of her voice to something she can honestly say she's never heard in her entire 2 years of knowing her. Something soft, almost affectionate.

"I guess now is a good a time to tell you gentleman that this won't be an issue for much longer because you see..." Lexa reaches Clarke and loops their arms together and rubs her shoulder. Clarke can only stand still in place, wondering what in the hell is about to go down, while at the same time willing every fiber of her being to ignore the sparks that seem to fly when Lexa makes contact with her body.

"Clarke and I are getting married." She momentarily rests her head on Clarke's shoulder and the blonde thinks Oscar nominations are in order for the stoic, unsurprised expression she is able to maintain on her own face.

Of all the things Clarke expected to hear, that did not even make the top 5 guesses. Or even the top 50. She thinks it's a good time to start yelling timber, because shit is going down.

The rhythm picks up again and Lexa finds herself mesmerised by the swivel of this stranger's hips, the flex of her shoulder blades as she lifts her arms above her head. The silhouette of her body leaves Lexa's mouth dry, the Scotch doing nothing to quench her thirst. Vivid lights dapple the blonde's skin in a sequence of violet, green and blue and Lexa can't look away.

Nia tries to use Clarke's skills as an assassin and her relationship with Lexa to force Lexa to make a mistake and give Nia the opportunity to take control of the coalition. Clarke tries to find a way to break free of Nia's control. Her friends try to help, but Clarke can't provide them with much information, so she is mostly on her own. Clarke tries to navigate her relationships with everyone she cares about while trying to break free from Nia, but until then, she serves the Ice Queen. Nia uses everything she's got to make Lexa suffer and uses Clarke's status as Wanheda to her advantage over the other clans. Nia will do whatever it takes for power, and Clarke and her friends will do whatever it takes to stop her.

It's been ten years since the Arkadia Strikers have hoisted the Jaha Cup. Clarke Griffin knew it when she was drafted, kept it in mind as she ascended to the starting goalie position and used it to fuel her will as a key player of the team, supporting her teammates until the second round of the playoffs last season, where they faced a grueling loss to the TonDC Shockwave after only five games. The team is now in desperate need of a player that will light a spark in the offensive line, a player that will restore the long-lost identity of the team and prove that it still deserves the famous nickname "power strikers". Alexandria Woods, first line center and hockey extraordinaire, might be just the player. The twist: anyone who has seen her play knows that Lexa Woods has an ego bigger than her head and a superstar, cocky attitude that, although did well with her previous team, has brought her quite the reputation across the league.

She couldn't remember how many times she would sit on her lap as a child and marvel at the beautiful stone on her mother's finger. The many times she had snuck it off her mother's hand while she was distracted by a conversation and slipped it onto her own finger. The many times her mother would smile down at her fondly before whispering softly into her ear while twirling the ring around her tiny finger.

"One day, when you find someone you love with every inch of your being, you can give this to them. Then you'll be able to marvel at it all day, knowing that they wear this ring because they have nothing but absolute love for you."

And Lexa knew, from the very beginning that it would be Clarke that she would give the ring to, the clumsy woman who had literally bumped into her life and held onto to it with a firm grip...and never letting go.

Once Lexa moved in, there was talk in the local pubs. She'd moved into one of the nicest houses in the village that had cost a pretty penny, so many villagers were expecting the newcomer to be not one woman, but either a young couple or a family. When a singular young woman arrived, it raised a few eyebrows. Lexa had two next-door neighbours either side of her detached house. One was an elderly couple with grown-up children around the same age as herself, and the other house was home to a married couple and their young child. Neither had spoken to the woman. It was rumoured that she was hardly ever home, especially Mondays to Fridays. She would depart between half-past seven and eight in the morning and only return after four-thirty. On the weekends, she seemed to return home from shopping at half-past eight in the morning and after that, she wasn't seen. There was a whole mystery around her, and it was making some townspeople uncomfortable.

It happened. They didn't think it would happen but it did.

The desperate scream, loud, hearbroken. It joined the others around the world. The shock, the desolation, cries of disappointment and hurt.

"Clexa can't end like this" They whispered. The feeling in their chest so strong, that they wished, so hard that it trasended dimensions. Beyond the monitor in front of them, beyond the stupid screen writers, beyond death.

Next time they opened their eyes they weren't in their small dark room, they were in a bright white space with not visible walls.

After running away from her home in the colonies to escape being married off by her stepfather to 'whatever man would have her', Clarke begs, borrows, and steals her way onto a ship that will take her to the island of Polis, where it is rumored that the pirate captain Alexandria 'The Commander' Woods makes her home when she's not terrorizing the seas with her (almost) all-female crew on her ship, The Flame.

When they meet, though, things don't according to plan, and the captain denies Clarke a place on her ship. But then an explosion in the port injures one of Lexa's crew, and Clarke is given the opportunity to prove herself. Can she save the girl, and along with her, any hope she has for a future of her own choosing?

Queen Alexandria Woods of the Kongeda has won every battle she's ever fought. By the age of twenty she had done the unthinkable and united the thirteen great houses together into one nation; by twenty-four her great army had defeated the Reapers, a monstrous people far to the south that had been invading her land and murdering her people as long back as anyone could remember. Now Queen Alexandria must face her most difficult challenge yet: find a husband and secure her line by birthing an heir. It's the oldest duty in the book and the one that makes Alexandria's skin crawl. Nevertheless she is determined to do her duty, but when she meets a mysterious blue-eyed woman her world begins to turn upside down. When she learns the woman is nothing more than a common whore her advisers and friends suggest against ever interacting with her again, but for some reason the queen just can't stay away. Her curiosity only grows when the woman starts teaching her lessons she never knew she needed to have, and everything she learns about her makes her even more of a mystery. The queen is nothing if not stubborn though, and she's determined to figure the woman out.

a: Lyssicole

Completed

This is the story of Heda and Wanheda, told years after a tragic death. In the style of mythology, Clarke and Lexa are known only by their legendary names. Still, the intimacy and detail of their story is reflected when told by a mother to her daughter. Despite the grandiosity of any legend, such as the ominous fate when Wanheda removes her hood or the extreme romanticism when Lexa falls to her knees, this is a story that is real. This is story in which meaning is attributed to each and every one of Clarke and Lexa's actions, in which the ending is quite different. That being said, the story diverts from canon toward the end. There is a twist. Nonetheless, it is peaceful but still devastating, as the pure essence of these two's relationships is the deepest of loves, marked by tragedy. The story of Heda and Wanheda is precise, it is enamoring, and it is a bit heart wrenching. For Clarke and Lexa, though, there will always be a new beginning.

She wondered why she has never heard of house Woods; The Rainswood did vaguely ring a bell though; she knew it existed as she had heard a few drunken Ironmen soldiers mention the location during her travels to Dragonstone. And Viserys, her deceased brother, had also promptly mentioned the Rainswood in a long ago past, but not much about what precisely has been said seem to have lingered in her memory. She probably didn't deem it very important at the time.

Clarke Griffin leads a team of soldiers with an extremely rare skill set - immortality. The world knows them as 'The Delinquents' - ghost soldiers who need no reason to kill everything on their path. From the fall of Troy to Alexander's army to World wars, they have fought for the causes they found most worthy of their time. But now at the dawn of the 21st century, Clarke and her friends ply their trade for those who can find—and afford—their services.

Alexandria Augustus Woods is the CEO of one of the world's most powerful private security and intelligence companies - The Tree Crew. For years, she has sought revenge from the Delinquents for destroying everything good in her life. But when she finally faces her enemies, they tell her that she is like them - an immortal. Questioning her own beliefs, Lexa struggles to adapt to her new identity.

Clarke and her team have to form unusual alliances and fight for their lives as Mount Weather and Tree Crew form an alliance against them in order to unlock the mystery of their blood.

The Clexa Triwizard AU, where Clarke Griffin returns to Hogwarts for her final year and finds herself in the midst of trouble: her father's been thrown into Azkaban without a fair trial, she's having strange recurrent nightmares, someone entered her name in the Triwizard Tournament, a mysterious dark witch known as the Ice Queen is intent on starting the third wizarding world war, dark creatures are breeding and preying on wizardkind, and the champion of Durmstrang is a gorgeous girl with green eyes and a jawline to die for. Clarke probably shouldn't fall for her rival-turned-best-friend, but together they discover the strongest magic of all. Disclaimer: you don't need to know HP to read this.

For some, summers were the perfect time to have adventures - to go on a trip to the Caribbean, scuba dive, climb a mountain, whatever crazy dream they had. For others, it was a time to make new friends. You go to the beach or the pool with your crew and enjoy a lemonade at the end of the day. Summer was also a time to fall in love. Hold hands, share kisses and at the end you'd remember those sweet moments once upon a time.

Summer meant laughter and fun, but it was freedom.

Yet, for Clarke Griffin, summers became a time to go to war. A time to make the life of one Lexa Woods as miserable as possible and in return Lexa would retaliate. Summers were wild. A childhood to remember because who could forget?

The woman doesn't move, but stands in the doorway with one hand on a curved hip and the other swinging a leather crop lazily by her side. The figure on their knees before her jumps when; as quick as a flash the crop is brought down with an almighty crack upon the woman's now outstretched palm and then; she steps forward slowly, languidly, haunting green eyes hard and cold, a sculpted brow raised in consideration as she speaks in a low, clear and surprisingly feminine voice "I hear you have misbehaved?"

Lips quiver with anticipation when the bent figure replies submissively "Yes, Commander." The woman says nothing, her face stoic before she strides to the door and slams it shut. The woman slowly turns, face blank as she lightly taps the crop on her palm as she surveys the figure before her. Finally after what feels like forever the woman speaks, her voice bored but firm "Let's get on with your punishment then. Get on all fours."

Lexa perches among the branches of a tall oak tree, leaning against the trunk while she waits for her prey.

In the distance, a towering cement structure is abuzz with activity, combined with flashing lights and the booming klaxon of sirens letting everyone in the vicinity know that there has been an escape.

So far, Lexa is impressed with the criminals.

Clarke is not running. She stands her ground, firm and proud, facing down her pursuers. A look of fierce concentration twists her features and she stares at Lexa with unparalleled intensity.

Lexa meets Clarke's stare, two equal forces colliding.

Lexa blinks and Clarke is gone.

Lexa has just been discharged from the hospital, and cleared to be sent back to the United States. She has not talked to Clarke for several months due to Clarke refusing to contact or communicate with her. Lexa knows that Clarke was not happy with her decision to finish another tour with the Marines, however Lexa is convinced that Clarke just needed time to forgive her. It is not until seven months after she left home, and a month and a half after her accident that she finally receives a letter from Clarke. She is handed the letter with her ticket home, but she is unaware how much her life will be different when she arrives.

The field is my sanctity. Here on the cold damp grass, that I've sweat, bleed I can breathe, I can cry, I can confess. I love this place packed with cheering fans, but now, silent, this place is peaceful. Normally, I would be content sitting here, but something is missing. Someone. My heart knows the answer, but my head won't let me acknowledge the truth. I need to focus and be strong for my team, for my school.

Love is weakness.

Love will destroy what I've built.

My back against the steel pole, I hit my head against it to try and hold back the tears and repeat to myself.

Love is weakness.

Love will destroy what I've built.

By the time I feel the pain in my head starts to hurt I slam my hands to the ground. Tears begin to stream down my face and I can't stop them. All I can do is sink into the surface and attempt to comfort myself.

I am like Atlas, carrying the weight of the world on my shoulders trying to survive. Life is more about surviving. Living has its ups and downs. Surviving is steady, but there is no high, no love, no adventure, no fear, and no reward.

She didn't have to say that it was in a trash can back in Polis and probably it was ringing away. She had kept her most essential numbers, though. But she wasn't ready to call them just yet.

It's a strange feeling, uncomfortable even. To know that your daughter is happy — and to hate everything that the person who makes her happy represents, to trust them so little you would rather hurt your daughter now by removing them from her life than see her hurt a lot more later when they inevitably break her heart. So Abby feels her heart expand at every smile that blooms in Clarke's lips — only to feel it constrict painfully every time she remembers who triggers it.

Pike has been defeated and the Coalition is at peace once more. Abby finds out about Clarke and Lexa's relationship sooner than they wanted to come out with it.

When the people of this world are between the ages of 7 to 10 years old, they "Present" as one of three biological categories. The three categories are: Alpha, Beta and Omega.

Alpha's are usually very dominant, competitive, quick tempered and, of course, they like to show off their strength.

Beta's are calm and neutral with some surface level characteristics mainly found in Alpha's and Omegas.

Omega's are warm, caring and submissive but strong enough to stand up to some of the stupid alphas out there.

So, can you imagine that how surprised two Griffin were when they found their only daughter showed them tiny flame on her tiny palm three years ago? Their only daughter, their omega-not-alpha daughter. Clarke Griffin.

The Commander's life had always been dictated by action and reaction, war and conflict, pain and suffering. When one enemy fell another would rise, and through it all there had always been one guiding principle that had kept minds clear and hearts tempered to the foils of the foolish. But when the last great enemy of the clans was felled by a stranger, a newcomer to the world, it fractured a heart once cold and hardened and threatened to bring it to its knees.

Lexa had never been allowed to feel remorse for her actions, she had been trained to ignore any and all ideas of uncertainty and indecision and yet, when she should feel only victory, she felt an emptiness that hollowed her heart. It was unfamiliar, something she hadn't let herself feel for years. But after the Mountain's fall she couldn't hide from it, no matter how hard she tried. And so she turned to the only person in her life who might be able to help her understand a pain she had thought relic to her past.

Five years after Ice Nation joins the Coalition, the Dropship carrying the delinquents lands on Trigeda territory and Costia is tasked to infiltrate their camp to see whether they can be trusted. However, it becomes difficult when she becomes acquainted with the son of the Sky Peoples' chancellor.

With chapter 15 marking the conclusion of Season One, Costia and her clan brace themselves for the threat of war after the Ark's descent to Earth. When tragedy strikes the Woods Clan, including Costia's family a few days later, war seems imminent until Wells and Clarke forge a truce and alliance with Commander Lexa in order to get both their people out of Mount Weather. Costia struggles with her partially unresolved feelings for Lexa while her feelings for Wells grow. Wells comes to the conclusion that Post-Nuclear Earth is a planet where one's moral compasses are challenged and that there are times that doing what is right isn't always a option.

Clarke and Lexa are soulmates and live in a world where (though it is rare) what your soulmate draws on their skin also appears on yours.

Clarke does not have time for soulmates. She decides this once she hears Jasper's gut-wrenching screams as she tries desperately to save him. Life on the ground was about survival. Soulmates were a distraction. Love was a distraction.

Despite this, Clarke still finds herself praying every night that her soulmate is okay, and that the reason they had never replied was not because Clarke hadn't been able to save them from something she could never even have known about.

Part 3 of #ClaxaWeek2018

Clarke and Lexa have been convinced for years that the only thing they have in common is their love for their mutual best friend Lincoln. When Lincoln meets the girl of his dreams and has less time to spend with his two wildly different besties, it's up to Clarke and Lexa to find out whether they've been wrong about each other all along.

Clarke can't look at Lexa without burning.

She can't look at that face, black streaks smeared around green eyes, jaw as straight and hard as a blade, without her teeth clenching and her nails biting into her palms.

(She remembers Lexa's lips, so soft and warm against hers).

Clarke Griffin and Alexandria Mikealson, both strangers to one another meet in the unlikeiest of places .... the New York's much famed Brooklyn Bridge which has often been dubbed by many as the "Suicide Bridge". It's late November of 2016, a month from the blissful joys of Christmas and New Year's. Yet, here they stand, on the Brooklyn Bridge at 3.30am.

They say the best things in life comes out of the blue. They say if you look closely you see signs of destiny and maybe this attempt to end their lives might be futile, unhanding certain twists in their path that might make them want to live again.

Life should be more than just surviving...

Part 7 of Clexa Week 2017

The last thing that Clarke wants to wake up to after a big night out is the sound of her next door neighbour practicing the violin. When she confronts her neighbour about the racket coming from her apartment, Clarke gets more than she bargained for.

In which Clarke is beyond hungover and Lexa is very talented with her fingers.
