"All through her life she'd worked so hard to make herself happy, faking it and putting on a mask for those around her. Raven had always hoped that if she'd pretended long enough then maybe one day it would become true. Life unquestionably dealt her an unfair hand but Raven knew that faking it and trying to make happiness happen wasn't the way things were meant to work for her.

All she had to do was wait for it. "

Part 1 of At Last

After the death of her father, Clarke Griffin had lost everyone that she had cared about and all she had left was the sport that made her feel most connected to him. So with nothing left to keep her home, the college freshman left for her first year of school with a hope of replacing all that she'd lost. But when her new soccer captain, Lexa Woods, turns out to be more of a dictator than a teammate will Clarke find that she's in over her head? Or will she find herself ready to take the plunge when love strikes?

Waiting for Love to Strike is a modern day college AU that is rated mature mostly for later chapters. The central mold of the story takes place among a college soccer team but will focus less on soccer and more on the girls involved.

Part 3 of What We Deserve

Eight days after receiving a gunshot wound to the abdomen, Lexa wakes up in Arkadia. She's injured, weak, and a shadow of the Commander she once was...but she's alive. Several miles away, Roan kom Azgeda has laid claim to her throne in Polis, and is marshaling the might of the Coalition against Skaikru. Clarke must stave off war long enough for Lexa to recover her strength, knowing full well that once she does, Clarke will have to risk losing her all over again. In this final part, she and Lexa will have to fight to secure a future together - without falling apart.

A canon universe fic. Also known as Nobody Dies AU.

After the fall of Mount Weather, Clarke and the remaining members of the original 100 return to Camp Jaha. It seems, however, that all is not forgiven and the Arkers cannot let go of the "delinquent" status of the 100, in spite of the fact that they depend on the skills of their young "criminals" to survive. Pushed to the limit, Clarke leads her people away from the Ark and from the reach of Lexa's coalition to begin a new life at the edge of the Dead Zone. Life is tough, but this tenacious group (under Clarke's now recognised visionary and pretty uncontested leadership) slowly begin to thrive... until, almost four years after the fall of Mount Weather, a Trikru messenger approaches from the east.

The most iconic love stories are always about a man and a girl. But, not this one. This one is about girl studying Law with an ugly past and a girl studying Med who has the brightest smile Lexa has ever seen. This one smells like alcohol, and cigarretes, and sex. This one feels like driving in the middle of the night. This one sounds like The 1975, like Lana del Rey. This one is one worth telling.

Superpower AU!

Clarke starts the school year at her 12th school, Arkadia University, one of the most prestigious superpower universities. After the death of her father, she has been living on the run for the past 10 years, 3 of which with her brother, Aden, before it was too dangerous to stay together. She lives a life of constant survival as a result of her highly dangerous birthright superpower, known to be exterminated. She shouldn't be alive.

Clarke meets Lexa, a wealthy girl with a prying dad and she finds a sense of comfort in her presence. Her state of survival, however, isn't as safe as she finds it to be.

Two different sides to the same world, children of the moon and children of the night, there has been peace between them for years. Longer than anyone can truly remember but even in peace, there is tension. Rules that cannot be broken and during the yearly summit, the meeting of the two factions two star crossed lovers find out what happens with those rules are broken. Lexa and Clarke risk the peace of their people for the feeling of being whole again in one another's arms.

Just imagine in all the things that happen between Lexa's death and the ending of season 4, Lexa was standing in the background and being Clarke's moral compass. Luna was just a random Nightblood, who donated her bone marrow.

We Dream As One

Clarke has extremely realistic and vivid dreams where she is living the life of another girl named Lexa. This starts from childhood and continues into adulthood, despite Clarke's concerned parents trying to intervene. However, these dreams may just be a little too realistic, but oh so very necessary for their mutual survival.

Excerpt:

"Clarke wakes up panicked and short of breath, screaming into the void of her room. "Noooooooooo!" She can still feel everything. Everything. Her tears are hot and they sting in a way that just adds to her pain. But...it's not her pain. It is just a dream. In her dreams she's broken. In her dreams she's on the brink. In her dreams she has green eyes...and always has. While she sleeps she lives out the life of her alter ego; Lexa."

Part 2 of You only know what you want to know (and not what you want to see)

They were done with it. The world of espionage was a thing of the past. But twenty years later when Clarke and Lexa's daughter Costia delves into the world her mothers had forsaken, they are suddenly more embroiled than they were before.

On the heels of this revelation, a ghost of Lexa's past returns to haunt her. And when agents begin disappearing out of nowhere, Clarke and Lexa have no choice but to return from retirement to find out who is hunting their friends.

After Lexa's death, Clarke is a mess. She doesn't leave her room, and after a few weeks, her friends and mother stop trying to get her out. Her grief is all-encompassing. But then Titus offers her a way out: Clarke and Lexa were soulmates. They have been destined to meet in many different lifetimes and fall in love, only to be torn apart by tragedy. He has a way for Clarke to re-live all these lifetimes. The offer's a good one; Clarke thinks it could give her some semblance of closure. There's just one catch: Clarke will see Lexa die, over and over again -- and if she ever tries to stop it, she could destroy every life she's ever had.

Part 3 of Supernatural AU (Werewolf Lexa x Vampire Clarke)

As the times changed and their bodies evolved, mating cycles became a thing of the past. No longer did omega werewolves become slaves to painful desires, and no longer did alpha's turn into raging fools of lust and violence. They had been freed of such dubious natures, something Lexa was very grateful for. But it wasn't uncommon that mated werewolves felt the call of old dealings when the moon was at her fullest.

It was then that pups were often sought to be created and their bodies were prone to transformations. Even though the mating between Lexa and Clarke was unique, considering one was of elder werewolf blood and the other was centuries of vampire lineage, their bond was something that shattered all reasoning and brought forth traditions that she thought were only reserved to her kind.

Years had passed since ALIE's defeat.

Clarke had lost people along the way, some she cared for more than others. People had even tried to kill her, almost too many for her to count and still she had survived.

And so some said her survival through the years was because of the Commander, while others said it was simply because she was Wanheda, the Commander of Death, the one most clans looked to for guidance in times of uncertainty, or as a source of blame in times of trouble.

But when the deaths kept piling higher and higher could she really be blamed for leaving everything behind? Maybe it was selfish that Clarke now lived a life of solitude tucked away in the depths of Trikru territory in a small cabin she had built almost entirely on her own. But she didn't care when the only thing expected of her was only what she expected of herself. But her past always had a way of catching up to her, especially when it involved the Commander.

When Wanheda's title was not strong enough to ward off nature's course, Clarke found herself in the proximity of someone she promised to kill. Torn between the hate Clarke felt for this betrayer and old feelings she wished could be forgotten, Clarke made a choice. And before she could live with the consequences of her actions, life pulled her down an unforeseen path. Leaving the grounders with only memories of Wanheda's sun kissed hair and the tale of how her fight ended too soon. Today the Skai princess's story is nothing but a distant memory. One long replaced by curious whispers surrounding Azgeda's mysterious new Heir, Klark. With a new enemy threatening the Coalition's Western borders, the Commander had no choice but to summon the 13 clans together. As the clans begin to assemble for the upcoming war, many eagerly await the arrival of Azgeda. This will be their first chance to solve the mysteries surrounding Klark and to see if she truly is the Winter Wolf Azgeda claims her to be.

"That's not true, love! I just, i... Why do we have to put so much pressure on something we'd are supposed to do to relax and show each other how much we love each other? Why don't we try something else?" Lexa asks while fidgeting with the hole in her sleep shorts.

"What do you mean, Lex?" Lexa looks at Clarke then moves to grab her phone, pulling up a picture then handing it to Clarke without saying a word. Clarke looks at the picture then raised her eyebrows in question, wanting Lexa to explain.

"It's just an idea. It would give us some excitement while we try to make some mini Clarke's."

Lexa shrugs as she tried to brush off Clarke's stare. A smile breaks across Clarke's face, she grabs the nape of Lexa's neck to pull her into a kiss.

"I love the idea Lexa. When can we begin?"

Clarke Griffin is a Hunter (aka, a demon-hunter), daughter of Jake Griffin. The only reason people actually know her name is because of her father's sacrifice during the Black Death. Most of her friends were Hunterborn, people born with the gift to slay demons up until recently when their numbers started to drop dramatically.

After Clarke uncovers the truth about their past - and quite scarily, their future, she must find the First Hunters and help them save the world.

Lexa and Clarke have been married for almost Seven years now with two kids, life is starting to get... bumpy. Lexa just went into business with Indra. They are working as a private contractor for the military. Sending people in to help train soldiers in Military logistics and defense. Lexa and Indra were in the Military together, and she retired just after she and Clarke got married, when they decided to have kids. Clarke was working at a gallery VERY part time as she was raising kids, and when this opportunity with Indra came up, Clarke didn't really want to tell her wife no. Lexa is never home, and Clarke feels like a single parent. She and Lexa text, and when Lexa does come home it just in time to kiss the kids as they are going to sleep, if even that, and shower and climb into bed with Clarke. There is no communication or intimacy. The kids miss their Momma, and Clarke misses her wife. Raven and Octavia are the ones helping Clarke with the kids, and picking up Lexa's slack,

But Clarke doesn't want to be raising kids with her best friends, she wants her wife there.

When an architect finds herself in a presence of an unexpected truck driver, past and present seem to entangle in one to reconnect an old lost friendship.

However, will Clarke and Lexa be able to move past the wounds of their past together and mend bridges?

Clarke and Lexa find themselves around each other once more and both are hurt. After years apart and in the same city with the same friends, they have to deal with their old memories and the scars from their past.

Moving between their memories and their present time the two women will have to figure out if they can heal by moving forward together or if they have to do it alone.

Or simply a story in which Clarke and Lexa met as children but got apart around their teen years and now fate has it that they saw each other again and have to deal with it.

Clarke Griffin: a junior but talented paramedic at the Ark Hospital. Dr. Lexa Woods, MD: a young, prodigal surgeon dedicated to the Ark Hospital ER. Both with their demons that come with the job; both with personal losses that they fear they'll carry on their shoulders forever; both with an almost unbearable need for love and comfort; both unwilling to admit this about themselves.

OR

Paramedic Clarke and ER surgeon Lexa meet after a chance encounter with a mutual patient. The connection is palpable, physical, instant, but they've both sworn off relationships because of the nature of their careers and painful pasts.

They can keep it casual.

She can only hope that one of Arkadia's rival gangs aren't what ends up being at the end of it.

The last thing Clarke expects in this harsh, violent world is to run into a lover she left years ago – a lover she hasn't spent a day without missing since. But it becomes quite clear that Lexa Woods...isn't quite Lexa Woods anymore.

Clarke struggles to understand more about the stranger that now occupies the body of the woman that was once her entire world, and she isn't sure how eager she is to find out. As her reunited lover starts to make more appearances, soon getting alarmingly entangled into her professional life, Clarke decides that she is definitely not too eager after all.

There were uncountable people crowding the entrance of the hospital and injured were being pulled on stretchers, fresh blood spilled on the white tiles. Clarke's hands heavily landed on one of the stretchers, the cold metal biting her palm slightly, and helped the five nurses roll it in one of the emergency rooms.

It was a young woman pressed on the soaking sheets, losing too much blood from a bullet wound in her stomach, her hands shaking as she pressed on her own wound with a piece of cloth, trying to stop the bleeding. The nurses had to actually hit the woman's hands to make them lose the iron grip. Green eyes snapped around with panicked anger, taking in the faces that leaned over them, orbs calculating despite the pain.

Clarke paused. There was something about this woman –except the beautiful face and eyes– that got her attention. Something about her and the bullet wound in her stomach was familiar. It was stupid and it didn't make sense and she needed to snap out of it this exact moment because her patient was losing too much blood and did not need Clarke to think anything other than the piece of metal that was killing her.

Lexa doesn't remember the life she used to have before everything became silent and aseptic. Clarke always tried to gladden other people's existence with her chaotic presence. Being so different is a problem, especially when one of them is open to relationships while the other one keeps running away from them.

There are moments in history where death has occurred on a scale so massive that it cannot be processed. Comparatively, Clarke Griffin's Ring of Fire and the fall of Mount Weather are relatively small. What's 700 deaths compared to the thousands, the millions, the billions that occurred at the hands of people like Genghis Khan, Adolph Hitler and the mastermind behind Praimfaya? And yet she is perceived as Wanheda? The Commander of Death? For order the push of a button and pulling a lever? No, it takes far more than dropping a few hundred bodies for Death to bow to you, luckily for Clarke however, Death has put too much energy into her to just walk away now.

Grief, was the first feeling that crossed her heart as she gazed upon the sky. An overwhelming sadness that clung to her shadow and grappled her form to the ground. Clarke Griffin fell to her knees, tears tracking their way down her face before falling to the damp soil. Then, fury. A fiery ache that wrapped itself around her mourning heart. Tempering it. She welcomed the familiar feeling with open arms, the anger emanating off her in waves. Above her, filling the void of space were hundreds of shooting stars. Accept they weren't shooting stars. 300 bodies were propelled through the sky, wreathed in flames and beautiful in their tragedy.

Through the mist of sorrow, Clarke came to a conclusion. The only reason the ark would have made that sacrifice is if they believed that the delinquents on earth were dead. But that would mean; the hundred have all removed their wristbands, sentencing 300 people of the ark to die. She let loose a hoarse cry.

The 100 have all removed their wristbands, sentencing 300 people on the ark to be culled to preserve oxygen. Clarke fell into despair and left the delinquents to forge her own path on the ground. *Grounder Clarke

Clarke Griffin is the daughter of Jake Griffin-Billionaire inventor and CEO of the World's Largest Tech Company GriffINC. She has always had her sights on following her dream of becoming a journalist not going into the family business. As luck would have it, her father was killed in a tragic "accident" and she found her life turned upside down in more ways than one.

Clarke was told that her father's death was an accident, but she didn't believe that. The weeks leading up to it, she found her father fighting with the Board of Investors for GriffINC. This is what Clarke believed caused her father's death.

Putting on the act of the usual rich American Socialite, Clarke made everyone believe she didn't care about anything that wasn't late night partying and lavish spending. When in reality, she was working on an anonymous investigative blog she ran with her best friends and the love of her life. Clarke was able to unravel the mystery of whodunnit and why... but not before the Board got wind.

Trading herself and the information she obtained, Clarke finds herself in the hands of her enemies, with one last trick up her sleeve. Will it work? And if not, will her friends be able to find her before it's too late?

Usually, Clarke would have been pissed and argued with the short haired brunette over what she had just done, but she found it so damn hot that all it did was make her release an eager moan and ruin her panties to the point where they felt nonexistent. The desperation the werewolf seemed to have, reflected in herself, and she couldn't deny it if she wanted to.

She had been with many partners in her over two centuries long lifetime, both human and supernatural alike, but never had she met such an intoxicating alpha before. Any form of intimacy was rare between vampires and werewolves. They were natural enemies after all, though the treaty of 1886 had brought all that bloodshed to an end, along with bringing humans and supers together. Still, the one union you didn't often see in the crowds and in tabloids was that of a vamp and were.

"Are you sure?" It was her final offer.

As if to slap her in the face, the young woman was silent, the cold intensity of her stare battling with the fire in Clarke's. After a moment of unbearable friction, the blonde just nodded and pushed away from the bar, "Message received. You have a good evening, won't you?"

Hardly able to stop herself from suppressing the fury brimming on the back of her tongue, Clarke rested a hand lightly on Anya's arm as she walked by, "I hope her talent truly is exceptional. It will need to be."

"Not until we are lost do we begin to find ourselves again." - Thoreau.

You've been lost for so long, you can't remember how life was when you knew who you were. It is nothing but a shadow looming over you, you are only a figment of what you used to be. Now you are the girl that sits opposite the coffee shop with your dog, you have no name, no identity, not for the people who drop coins into your paper cup. Only the blonde angel working there seems to see you, seems to take notice that deep inside you there's more than a homeless girl looking for her next meal.

"Don't play with your food, darling."

The voice echoed softly in her head, Clarke's eyes darting back to the booth where gleaming forest green punched a hole through her chest, warming her tepid skin with their intensity alone.

"His arrogance is breathtaking."

"Then it is rather a good thing that you do not require air to live, is it not?" That small tick of a smirk across red painted lips had always done things to her...

She felt the girl shudder to her touches, heard her hum to her kisses, swallowed that hum as her tongue pushed into her mouth to touch her own and Clarke answered with her own hum because kissing Lexa Woods was like breathing for the first time, or like experiencing the most beautiful thing in the world for the very first time. She smelled like fall and rain and looked like the sky when it cried. She tasted like spring and summer and was warm like the breezes during those seasons.

Clarke fell deeper in love in that very moment then she had of all the moments that she had, had to fall deeper for Lexa. Because kissing Lexa was like coming home, and now that she was here. She never wanted to leave.

In which Clarke is dragged from the woods, kicking and screaming, and her anger does not abate with gentleness and patience. Nor is Lexa honourable enough to tell the Arkers that she has brought this storm home.

Some catching up on the AU: Anya is alive, because I've had enough stupid death in canon. She still escapes the Mountain with Clarke, but the Ark guards shoot her bicep, nothing essential. Then Clarke gets hit in the head, the guards bring them both back to Arkadia and they save her. When Clarke and Anya go to see Lexa together she is grateful to have Anya back, but still wary, and things proceed as before until Clarke leaves into the woods after the Mountain falls.

There is a meaningful look when Lexa betrays Clarke at the Mountain. Anya makes eye contact with Clarke's lost and shaken gaze and looks almost regretful as she turns to follow her Commander.

Delphi, who comes up to Clarke's shoulder, looks positively tiny next to it. The wolf has a strong, lithe body covered in silvery fur that seems to glow in the firelight from the sconces on the walls. The tail alone looks to be around three and a half feet and seems very strong. Clarke eyes it's slow side-to-side motion carefully.

[original author's summary]: Lexa has beheld many beautiful sights in her lifetime. She has watched the trees turn red and orange in autumn. She has watched golden sunlight dance atop the ocean at midday. She has looked up at the night sky and wondered at the stars, at the sheer vastness of it all – more often since Skaikru's arrival.

None of those sights can compare to the beauty spread before her.
